Ispahan, is-pá-hán', written also Isfahan (anc. Aspadana), a famous city, formerly the metropolis of Persia, in Irak-Ajemi, on the Zende-Rud, 210 miles S. of Teheran, in the midst of an extensive plain and at an elevation of 5500 feet above the sea. It is surrounded by groves and orchards. In the seventeenth century Ispahan was one of the largest and most magnificent cities in the world. Now by the side of the monuments of its former splendor and of beautiful gardens are vast areas covered with ruins. The streets are for the most part narrow and uninviting, but there are spacious caravansaries and handsome bazaars, the latter stretching away for miles, many of them in a state of decay. Famous among the bazaars is the Bazaar of the Tailors. The public baths are numerous. A magnificent bridge, consisting of a double row of 34 arches, spans the river and gives access to the once flourishing suburb of Julfa. The chief square of Ispahan is the Maidan Shah, formerly regarded as one of its greatest ornaments. Of the palaces the Tohehel-Situn, or "Forty Pillars," built by Abbas the Great, is the finest. Of the scores of mosques the most magnificent is the Mejid Shah, situated on the Maidan Shah, which is frequently stated to be the most sumptuous mosque of the Orient. The body of the edifice is surmounted by a vast dome, considered one of the finest specimens of Persian architecture. Connected with this mosque is a college of high rank. The suburb of Julfa was originally founded for a colony of Armenians whom Shah Abbas transplanted hither from Julfa-on-the-Aras, and who brought their weaving-industry with them. There are still many Armenians, and the city is the seat of an Armenian bishop. The artisans of Isfahan are esteemed the best in Persia; and its manufactures comprise all kinds of woven fabrics, gold-, silver- and leather-ware, paper articles, fire-arms, sword-blades, glass, earthenware, and articles of luxury, which are sent by caravans to Bagdad, Herat, India, and elsewhere. Under the caliphs of Bagdad, Isfahan became the capital of the province of Irak and rose to be a place of great population, wealth, and trade. Shah Abbas made it the seat of his empire, and spared no cost in embellishing it with the most splendid edifices. In 1722 it was plundered by the Afghans; in 1729 it was retaken by Nadir Shah, since which time it has not been a royal residence. The number of inhabitants is about 80,000, which is only about one-tenth of the population which Isfahan once possessed.

Italy (anc. Itā'liā), a kingdom in the S. of Europe, consisting of a peninsula, or continental portion, the islands of Sicily and Sardinia, and a number of small islands. The main-land extends from the extremity of Sicily, from which it is separated by the narrow Strait of Messina, to the Alps, between lat. 36° 38' and 46° 40' N. and between lon. 6° 32' and 18° 32' E. It is bounded E. by Austria and the Adriatic and Ionian seas (connected by the Strait of Otranto), SW. and S. by the Mediterranean (the arms known as the Tyrrhenian and Ligurian seas), W. by France, and N. by Switzerland and Austria. Its natural confines are the Alps and the sea. Previous to 1859, Italy was divided into the kingdoms of Sardinia and the Two Sicilies (Naples and Sicily), the Pontifical States, or States of the Church, the Lombardo-Venetian provinces of the Austrian Empire, the grand-duchy of Tuscany, the duchies of Parma and Modena, and two diminutive states—the principality of Monaco and the republic of San Marino. In 1859 Victor Emmanuel, king of Sardinia, obtained Lombardy, Parma, Modena, and part of the Pontifical States; Tuscany, the Marches, Umbria, and the Two Sicilies were annexed in 1860. In 1861 these were all united under the title of Kingdom of Italy. In 1866 Venetia was added, and finally in 1870 the unification of Italy was completed by the annexation of Rome and its territory. The island of Corsica, whose population is Italian, belongs to France, and the Maltese islands belong to Great Britain. Area, 110,659 sq. m.

The following table shows the divisions of the kingdom of Italy and the population of the provinces according to the latest census returns :

The provinces are distributed into 16 compartimenti,—viz., Piedmont, Liguria, Lombardy, Venetia, Emilia, Umbria, the Marches, Tuscany, Rome, the Abruzzi and Molise, Campania, Apulia, Basilicata, Calabria, Sicily, and Sardinia. (See these titles.) The republic of San Marino and the principality of Monaco are Italian, though not connected with the kingdom politically; and the same may be said of parts of Austria, Switzerland, and France.

The continental portion of the country is separated from the rest of Europe by the chain of the Alps, and its waters belong entirely to the basin of the Mediterranean Sea. The shores of the Adriatic are little indented, and on the N. are low and bordered by marshes; those of the Ionian Sea are flat at the foot of the Gulf of Taranto only. The W. shores of Italy are generally more elevated than the E., except in the Maremma (in Tuscany) and in the Pontine marshes. The chief islands are Sicily, Sardinia, Elba, and the Lipari Islands. The principal gulfs and bays are, in the Adriatic, those of Venice and Manfredonia; in the Ionian Sea, Taranto and Squillace; on the

W. coast, the bays of Santa Eufemia, Policastro, Salerno, Naples, and Gaeta, and the Gulf of Genoa.

Relief of the Land.—The great mass of the Alps forms the N. and NW. boundary with France, Switzerland, and Austria, and comprises parts of the Maritime, Cottian, Graian, Pennine, Lepontine, Rhaetian, Venetian, and other groups, some of the loftiest summits of these, as Mont Blanc (on the border of France), 15,782 feet, and Monte Rosa (on the Swiss frontier), 15,215 ft., being partially within Italian territory. Other lofty summits of these northern mountains are Gran Paradiso, 13,324 ft.; Pis Bernina, 13,295 ft.; Monte Viso, 12,608 ft.; Diavolada, 12,050 ft.; and Adamello, 11,660 ft. For the general characteristics of these mountains and for the passes that traverse them (Mont Cenis, Col di Tenda, Great and Little St. Bernard, Simplon, St. Gotthard, Splügen, Bernina, etc.) see the articles on ALPS and SWITZERLAND.

Southward and eastward of the great Alpine curve is the fertile bottom-land of Piedmont, Lombardy, and Venetia, traversed by the Po and other rivers, and made up in principal part of sediment derived from the destruction and disintegration of the bounding mountains. Until a comparatively recent (geological) period this plain, formed in part by subsidences, constituted an arm of the Adriatic, extending westward. Its general slope is to the E. and inward in the direction of the Po. The peninsular-mass of Italy conforms closely in trend to its axial mountain-system, the Apennines, which join on closely in the NW. to the Alps and extend through virtually the whole length of the peninsula, passing out into Sicily, and continued orographically as one of the outer ranges of the Atlas mountains in Tunis. Their loftiest summit is the Gran Sasso d'Italia (or Monte Corno), 9583 feet. A number of other summits exceed 8000 ft. (See APENNINES.) In Italy alone, on the continent of Europe, do we to-day find active vulcanism: Mount Vesuvius, on the Bay of Naples, about 4200 ft., with long periods of rest, may be said to have been continuously active since its first recorded great eruption in A.D. 79. Etna, on the island of Sicily, 10,755 ft., is equally active. Stromboli, one of the Lipari Islands, is in almost perpetual turmoil. Numerous evidences of past vulcanism are found in the Etruscan Hills of the northern plain, in some of the mountains of the Alban region, near Rome, and in the Phlegrean fields of the Neapolitan region.

Rivers and Lakes.—The country is generally well watered, but, except the Po, the rivers are small and frequently mere torrents; the chief of these are, in the basin of the Adriatic, the Tagliamento, Piave, Brenta, Adige, Po, Aterno, Sangro, and Ofanto; in the basin of the Ionian Sea, the Bradano; and in that of the Mediterranean (Ligurian and Tyrrhenian seas), the Arno, Ombrone, Tiber, Garigliano, and Volturno. Italy has some of the largest mountain-lakes in Europe; the chief are Maggiore, Garda, and Lugano, only in part in Italy, with Como and Isèo, which are entirely Italian, among the S. slopes of the Alps; and on the W. side of the Apennines the lakes of Trasimeno, Bolsena, and Bracciano, mostly of classic interest, some of them seemingly of the nature of crater-lakes. The northern lakes are famous for the beauty of their scenery. On the low parts of the Adriatic coast are several extensive shallow lagoons formed by the sea, the largest being those of Venice and Comacchio.

Climate.—From its position, form, and configuration, the country enjoys a varied and excellent climate, which permits the productions of the temperate and some of those of the torrid zone to mingle on its almost uniformly fertile surface. The exceptions to this are the pestilential marshes, especially the Maremma in Tuscany, the theatre of a prolonged struggle between human industry and the malignity of the climate. Snow lies during the year on the Alps at elevations of 9500 feet, and over, only. The valley of the Po has a temperate climate, resembling that of the centre of France; its lakes and portions of the lagoons of Venice are frozen in winter. In the region between lat. 38° and 40° 30' N. or S. of the line of Naples, snow falls on the slopes of the mountains only, and the olive, orange, and citron ripen in the open air; and in the S. of Calabria, in Sicily, and the neighboring islands the climate permits of the cultivation of tropical plants. Mean annual temperature: Milan (lat. 45° 28'), 55°; Venice (lat. 45° 25'), 54°; Florence (lat. 43° 45'), 59°; Rome (lat. 41° 54'), 60°; Naples (lat. 40° 52'), 61°; Palermo (lat. 38° 6'), 64° Fahr. The winters are mild, even in the N., or on the plains of Lombardy, and S. of the Apennines snow rarely falls. Exceptionally, however, it has been seen at Naples and also in Sicily. One of the most favored climatic regions of Italy is the Riviera, bordering on the Gulf of Genoa. The prevailing winds of Italy are W. and SW., during which the air is pure and healthy, but the S. portion of the country is frequently visited by the hot, pestilential winds of Africa, the Sirocco and Libeccio, during which vegetation is arrested and the human frame becomes languid and feeble. In the south the prevailing summer winds are from the N. The average annual rainfall for northern Italy is about 40 inches (rising to 51 inches at Genoa); for central Italy, 32 inches; and for the south, about 27 inches. The highest fall, about 100 inches, has been registered at Tolmezzo, in the extreme N.E., at the foot of the Alps. Fever prevails in marshy districts. It is asserted that one-sixth of the population of Italy suffers from malaria.

Natural Products, etc.—Italy is rich in mineral products, the metals that are worked comprising iron, copper, zinc, lead, and mercury. Some silver, gold, antimony, and manganese are also obtained. There were, in 1901, 719 productive mines of sulphur, whose combined product, valued at 43,819,718 lire, was 3,726,916 metric tons. The quarries of Italy employed 57,000 men and yielded building, sculptural, and decorative stone valued at 22,000,000 lire (more than one-half of which was marble). The Apennines supply the beautiful marble of Carrara. Borax, salt, nitre, alum, alabaster, lava, and other volcanic products are abundant. There are many mineral and gaseous springs. The vegetable productions of Italy are extremely varied. The Alps afford excellent pasture and forests with a great variety of timber. The chief products of the soil are corn in Sicily and in the plain of the Po (which latter also possesses some of the most extensive rice-fields in Europe), wheat, various fruits, and the vine. The chestnut forms an important article of food in the Apennines. The vine, olive, and other fruit-trees yield abundant crops; and in the S., cotton, the sugar-cane, orange, lemon, and fig are cultivated. The date and some other palms grow in favorable situations. The culture of the mulberry and the rearing of the silk-worm form an important branch of industry. The flora generally is typically Mediterranean, with numerous evergreens (evergreen-oak, pine, cypress), specially fitted to resist drought, and with the myrtle and olive as among the most distinctive forms. The chestnut forests of Sicily, at elevations of between 2000 and 3000 feet (where they are succeeded by the beech) are particularly impressive. The fauna resembles that of the rest of Europe in similar latitudes, but is generally deficient in the higher types, many of which have been exterminated. Lizards are very numerous, as are likewise the land-snails. Many of the African and north European birds pass as migrants. Fish are abundant in the rivers. The tunny-, anchovy-, and sardine-fisheries in the Mediterranean are very productive. The coasts of Sicily furnish sponges and corals. Cattle are reared to a considerable extent in the N., and goats and swine in the S. Among the domestic animals is the buffalo.

Manufactures, Transportation, etc.—Manufactures comprise silk (chiefly in Lombardy and Piedmont), woollens, gauze, porcelain, artificial flowers, hats, paper, parchment, musical instruments, leather, gold- and silver-ware, jewelry (filigree-work), mosaics, ivory-carvings, iron-, steel-, marble- and alabaster-products, etc. In 1895 there were engaged in the rearing of silk-worms 550,048 persons; and there were 173,000 skilled workmen (mostly women and children) employed in the manufacture and treatment of silk. As a wine-producing country Italy stands only second to France, her vineyards covering about 8000 sq. m. Parmesan cheese and macaroni are noted products. Italy had, in 1901, 9852 miles of railway in operation. The mercantile marine comprises numerous steamers and sailing-vessels; and Italian merchants are extensively engaged both in Mediterranean and oceanic commerce. At the close of 1900 the number of vessels engaged in the fisheries was 23,578, with an aggregate tonnage of 69,645. The naval force consists of battleships, armored cruisers, torpedo-boats, torpedo gun-boats, and torpedo-destroyers, the first two classes comprising about 40 vessels. The strength of the army on the peace footing is about 265,000 enlisted men, with more than 13,700 officers.

Religion, Education, etc.—Throughout the whole of Italy, Italian, in different dialects, is almost universally the language of the country; it is spoken in its greatest purity in Tuscany. The Roman Catholic religion is the religion of the state and is professed by almost the entire population. The pontifical hierarchy comprises 49 archbishops and 220 bishops, besides 6 cardinal bishops. The Pope, who continues to enjoy the privileges of a sovereign, is the supreme head of the church. In the installation of archbishops and bishops the royal exequatur is required. The government has realized enormous sums through the confiscation of the property of monastic institutions. A great part of the funds has been applied to the maintenance of the church and the purposes of education. The Italian government has done much to foster education; but notwithstanding that very great progress has been made, a very large proportion of the people are unable to read or write. There are 21 universities, of which 17 are sustained by the general government. Nine universities are of the first class, viz., those of Bologna, Genoa, Naples, Padua, Palermo, Pavia, Pisa, Rome, and Turin; and 8 of the second class, viz., those of Cagliari, Catania, Macerata, Messina, Modena, Parma, Sassari, and Siena. Camerino, Ferrara, Perugia, and Urbino have universities supported by provincial governments. The University of Naples is the largest, having over 5000 students. The University of Bologna is the most ancient. There are numerous public lycæums, gymnasia, and technical schools. The Accademia dei Lincei, whose seat is at Rome, and the Accademia della Crusca, of Florence, are among the foremost learned societies in the world. Italy is surpassed by few countries in the number of books annually issuing from the press. The history of European art since the thirteenth century is in great measure the history of art in Italy.

Government, etc.—The government of Italy is a constitutional hereditary monarchy. The reigning house is that of Savoy. The parliament consists of a senate and chamber of deputies. The senate, whose members sit for life, is composed of notables nominated by the king out of 21 categories,—ecclesiastics, officers of state, deputies who have served through 3 legislative terms, persons who have rendered great services to their country, persons paying taxes above a certain amount, etc. In addition, the princes royal have a seat in this body, whose members number about 400. The members of the chamber of deputies, 508 in number, are elected for a term of 5 years. All male citizens above the age of 21 years who are able to read and write and who pay taxes to the amount of 4 dollars (the payment of a certain amount of rent is a substitute) are entitled to the suffrage. The capital is Rome. The foreign possessions of Italy consist of Eritrea and Italian Somaliland, whose combined population is less than 1,000,000.

Italy had, in 1901, 3 towns whose population exceeded 400,000: Naples, 563,540; Milan, 491,460; Rome, 462,783.

History.—At the dawn of history the Italian peninsula was inhabited by a number of tribes designated as Italic (belonging mainly to the Latin, Oscan, Umbrian, and Etruscan groups) and by the Etruscans. Along the coasts of the southern portion were numerous Greek colonies (Rhegium, Croton, Sybaris, Tarentum, Locri, etc.), whence this part of Italy received the name of Magna Græcia. The region to the north of the peninsula was peopled by Gauls (whence the Roman name of Cisalpine Gaul). By 265 B.C. Rome was mistress of the peninsular part of Italy, whose inhabitants were gradually absorbed into a nation of Latin speech. Cisalpine Gaul was subjugated by Rome in 225–223 B.C. The Roman Empire was extinguished by the German invasions, and disappeared in A.D. 476. Soon after an Ostrogothic kingdom was established in Italy, which was conquered by the Byzantines in 536–53. The Lombards founded their Italian kingdom in 568–72, and enlarged their state on the ruins of the Byzantine dominion. A papal realm came into existence in the eighth century. In 774 Charles the Great, king of the Franks, put an end to the Lombard kingdom and crowned himself king of Italy. This Italian kingdom, which embraced the northern half of the country, was ruled by his descendants until 961, when Otto the Great, king of Germany, placed the Lombard crown on his head. His coronation by the pope as emperor in 962 inaugurated the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation, within which realm the lands of northern and central Italy, or portions of them, were included throughout the greater part of the Middle Ages. The Byzantine dominions in the S. were conquered in the eleventh century by the Normans, who wrested Sicily from the Saracens. In 1194 the German dynasty of the Hohenstaufen (which ruled the Holy Roman Empire for a century) came into possession of the kingdom founded by the Normans (the Two Sicilies). They were dispossessed in 1266 by the French House of Anjou, which, however, succeeded only in retaining hold of the Sicilian dominions on the main-land (the kingdom of Naples), while Sicily itself passed under Aragonese rule, soon to become for a time independent.

During the early centuries of the Middle Ages the republic of Venice, from slender beginnings, grew up into a state which developed untrammelled by the yoke imposed upon the neighboring regions by the German emperors. By the twelfth century it had become very powerful. At this time there were two other great maritime republics, Pisa and Genoa. At the close of the thirteenth century Genoa destroyed the power of Pisa, and a century later Venice came off victorious in her long struggle with Genoa. In the twelfth century the numerous city republics of northern Italy began to play an important rôle. In 1167 the Lombard League was formed against the German emperors, whose dominion in Italy waned away completely in the course of the thirteenth century. Milan and Florence outstripped the other republics of the interior. Florence led Europe in the great revival of the arts and letters. Dante shed lustre upon her at the beginning of the fourteenth century and Giotto was his contemporary. Two centuries later Italian art reached its culmination in Raphael and Michelangelo.

Before the close of the Middle Ages most of the city republics had fallen into the hands of petty tyrants, and the smaller ones had been swallowed up by their neighbors. At the close of the fifteenth century Italy consisted mainly of Piedmont (belonging to the dukes of Savoy), Genoa, the duchy of Milan, Mantua, Venetia, Florence, the Papal States, and the kingdom of Naples. Sicily had passed into the possession of Aragon, which also ruled Sardinia. In 1503 the Spaniards became masters of the kingdom of Naples, and before the middle of the century Milan passed under Spanish rule. The duchy of Parma was created in 1545. In 1569 the Florentine dominions were erected into the grand-duchy of Tuscany. In 1713-14 Lombardy and Naples passed under the rule of Austria. In 1720 Sardinia passed to Savoy, whose duke assumed the title of King of Sardinia. In 1734-35 the Bourbon dynasty was established on the throne of the Two Sicilies. The period of the Napoleonic wars wrought great changes in the political complexion of Italy. At their close the former political divisions and dynasties were in a great measure restored. The republics of Venice and Genoa had, however, disappeared,—the Venetian dominions having passed to Austria and Genoa being annexed to Sardinia. In 1859-70 the liberation and unification of Italy were achieved (see beginning of article).

Italy, a post-village and township (town) of Yates co., N.Y. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1094; of the village, 100.

Italy, a banking post-town of Ellis co., Tex., in a grain and cotton region, 15 miles S. by W. of Waxahachie, on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas and the International and Great Northern Rrs. It has a cotton-seed oil mill, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1061.

Italyhill, a village of Yates co., N.Y., 12 miles SW. of Penn Yan. Pop. 100.

Itamaraca, ce-tá-má-rá-ká', written also Itamaraca, and Maraca, má-rá-ká', an island of Brasil, in the Atlantic Ocean, state and 20 miles N. of Pernambuco, separated from the continent by a narrow strait. Length, from N. to S., 9 miles; greatest breadth, 6 miles. It contains the town of Conceição and several villages.

Itamarati, ce-tá-má-rá'tee, a fine cataract of Brasil, 60 miles NW. of Rio de Janeiro.

Itambé, a mountain of Brasil, in Minas Geraes, SE. of Diamantina.

Itanhaca, ce-tán-yá'êw, formerly Conceição, kon-sá-sôw', a maritime town of Brasil, state and 40 miles S. of São Paulo, on a bay of the Atlantic.

Itapacoroya, ce-tá-pá-ko-ro'yá, a bay and headland of Brasil, state of Santa Catharina.

Itaparaica, ce-tá-pá-ree'há, an island of Brasil, in the Bay of Bahia, immediately opposite Bahia, whose harbor it shelters. Length, 18 miles.

Itapemirim, ce-tá-pá-me-reew', a village of Brasil, state of Espirito Santo, 65 miles SW. of Victoria, on the river of its own name, near its mouth in the Atlantic Ocean.

Itapetininga, ce-tá-pá-tá-neeng'gá, a town of Brasil, state and 120 miles W. of São Paulo, in a fertile valley. Near it great numbers of cattle are reared, which are exported to Rio de Janeiro.

Itapeva, ce-tá-pá-vá, a market-town of Brasil, state and 160 miles W. of São Paulo.

Itapicuru, ce-tá-pe-koo-roo', a river of Brasil, state of Bahia, enters the Atlantic Ocean 90 miles NE. of the city of Bahia, after an E. course of 350 miles.

Itapicuru de Cima, ce-tá-pe-koo-roo' dá see'má, a town of Brasil, state and 110 miles NNE. of Bahia, near the river Itapicuru.

Itapicuru Grande, ce-tá-pe-koo-roo' grán'dá, a river of Brasil, state of Maranhão, after a northward course of upward of 400 miles joins the river São José SW. of Maranhão Island.

Itapicuru Grande, a town of Brasil, state of Bahia, on the Itapicuru, about 45 miles from its mouth.

Itapua, or Ytapua, ce-tá-poo'á, a town of Paraguay. See ENCARNAÇÃO.

Itaqueira, ce-tá-ká'e-rá, a mountain-range of Brasil, in the SE. part of the state of Mato Grosso, stretches for a great distance along the right bank of the Paraná.

Itasca, a county in the N. part of Minnesota, bounded on the N. by Rainy Lake and the Rainy Lake River, and on the SW. by the Mississippi River. Area, 5575 sq. m. It is partly drained by the Big Fork River and contains numerous lakes. Capital, Grand Rapids. Pop. in 1890, 743; in 1900, 4573.

Itasca, a post-village of Dupage co., Ill., on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., 20 miles WNW. of Chicago. Pop. in 1900, 258.

Itasca, a banking post-village of Hill co., Tex., 11 miles N. of Hillsboro, on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas R. It has agricultural and cotton interests. Pop. in 1900, 1277.

Itasca, a post-village of Douglas co., Wis., on the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha R. The banking point is Superior.

Itasca Lake, Minn., the main source of the Mississippi River, is in Beltrami co. and in lat. 47° 10' N. It is environed by pine-covered hills and lies at an elevation of 1460 feet.

Itata, ce-tá'tá, or Chillán, cheel-yán', a river of Chile, enters the Pacific Ocean 60 miles NNE. of Concepción, after a westward course estimated at 150 miles. The name Chillán is more properly applied to the N. and principal branch of the Itata. The small town of Itata is near the river, 20 miles SE. of its mouth.

Itati, or Itaty, ce-tá'tee', a town of the Argentine Republic, 35 miles NE. of Corrientes, on the Paraná.

Itatiaia, or Itatimiasu, a mountain of Brasil, in the Serra da Mantiqueira, is generally recognized as the culminating point of the republic. Height, variously estimated at from 9490 to 10,340 feet.

Itaves, e-tá'vê, a district of northern Luzon, Philippine Islands, named from its natives, the Itaves, who raise rice and a fine tobacco. It is intersected by the Rio Chico de Cagayan and its affluents.

Itawamba, a county in the NE. part of Mississippi, has an area of 536 sq. m. It is intersected by the Tombigbee River. Capital, Fulton. Pop. in 1890, 11,708; in 1900, 13,544.

Itchen, itch'en, a river of England, in Hampshire, enters Southampton Water E. of Southampton.

Itenez, a river of South America. See GUAYORÉ.

Ithaca, ith-á'ká, Ithaki, e-thá'kee, or Thiaki, thá'kee (Gr. Ἰθάκη, ithákē), one of the Ionian Islands, in the Mediterranean, 3 miles E. of Cephalonia. Length, 14 miles.

Area, 37½ sq. m. It is nearly divided into two halves by a deep bay on its E. side, the Gulf of Molo. The surface is wholly mountainous, culminating in the N. in the plateau of Anoi, 2645 feet in elevation. The Hagios Stephanos, in the S., rises to 2200 feet. Olive-oil, currants, and superior wine are the chief products. Many of the inhabitants live by maritime trade. The chief town is Vathy (Ithaca). On this island are some cyclopean walls and other remains of antiquity. Pop. in 1896, 11,409. In the Homeric epic of the Odyssey, Ulysses is king of Ithaca.

Area, 31,846 sq. m. It is one of the finest regions of Mexico. The E. portion, although traversed by the western Cordillera, is extremely fertile, and the districts near the coast are covered with luxuriant forests; but the climate is unhealthy. The Sierra Nayarit and Sierra Jalisco are the dominant orographic features. Most of the region is volcanic, and in the S. is the active volcano of Colima, 12,750 feet in altitude, and near to it the Nevado de Colima, 14,100 feet. Jalisco is intersected by the Rio Grande (or Santiago) and its numerous affluents, and on its S. side has the large lake of Chapala. Agriculture and (silver) mining are the chief industries. Sugar-cane, cotton, and tobacco are extensively cultivated. Capital, Guadalajara. Pop. in 1900, 1,137,811.

Jamaica, já-má'ká (Sp. pron. há-mi'ká; Fr. Jamaïque, shá'má'ek'), one of the Great Antilles, and the principal of the British West India Islands, in the Caribbean Sea, between lat. 17° 40' and 18° 32' N. and lon. 76° 12' and 78° 25' W., about 90 miles S. of Cuba. Length, 144 miles. Area, inclusive of the Turks and Caicos islands, Cayman Islands, Morant and Pedro cays, 4424 sq. m., of which 4200 sq. m. belong to the island proper. Its general appearance is extremely beautiful. On the N. it rises into hills of gentle ascent, covered with pimento groves and a brilliant verdure and intersected by vales, while on the S. it presents abrupt precipices and cliffs. The coast-line is 500 miles long, and is indented by a great number of excellent harbors, of which Port Royal, or the harbor of Kingston, and Old Harbor to the SW. are the most considerable. Almost everywhere it is bordered inwardly by lines of cliff or ancient beach-lines. The island is traversed by lofty mountains in all directions, the principal chain, called the Blue Mountains, occupying the axis, and stretching from E. to W., with a sharp crest, having numerous lofty elevations: Blue Mountain, towards the centre (7360 feet), John Crow Hill, Silver Hill, St. Catherine's Peak (5036 ft.). The declivities are covered with stately forests. The valleys are all very narrow, not more than a twentieth part of the island being level ground. The principal rivers are the Minho, Black, and Cobre, which all empty on the S. coast. The mountains consist of shales, clays, and conglomerates, with some limestones, the last being properly the matrix of the hilly table-land which covers much of the central and western districts, in which are found the sinks or "cockpits." The N. side of the island is reputed to be the more healthy, though all insalubrity ceases at an elevation of 1400 ft. The rainy seasons are from May to August and in October and November. Earthquakes are frequent; hurricanes less so than in the other West India Islands. At Kingston the range of temperature is from 67° to 90°, with an annual rainfall of 44 inches. On some of the mountain slopes the precipitation increases to 100 inches. The soil is naturally less productive than in many of the West India Islands, but most of the staple products of tropical climates are raised. Indigo, cotton, and cacao were formerly important staples, but at present these are sugar, rum, coffee, bananas, oranges, and spices (pimento). In 1901 the exports of bananas amounted to £825,288; of coffee, to £152,091; and of oranges, to £102,780. Tobacco, corn, yams, arrow-root, and ginger are also extensively cultivated. The plantain, banana, sweet potato, etc., compose the principal food of the blacks. The forests yield many varieties of fine wood, such as ebony, logwood, fustic, mahogany, lance-wood, etc., which are or have been largely exported. A very large part of the soil still remains uncultivated.

Jamaica is divided into 3 counties (Surrey, Middlesex, and Cornwall) and subdivided into 15 parishes. The government is vested in a governor, who is assisted by a privy and a legislative council. The island has 185 miles of railway.

Besides Spanish Town, the old capital, and Kingston, the chief port and present seat of government, the island contains the towns of Port Royal and Morant on its S. side, and the maritime villages of Luces, Montego Bay, Falmouth, St. Ann's, Port Maria, and Port Antonio on its N. coast, and several minor ports. Jamaica was discovered by Columbus in 1494. It was wrested from the Spaniards by the English in 1655. The native population died out under the Spanish yoke, and the English imported a vast number of negro slaves. In 1833 parliament passed an act abolishing slavery. The fugitive negro slaves and their descendants were known as Maroons. Pop. in 1891 (Jamaica proper), 639,491, of whom 488,624 were blacks, 14,692 whites, 121,955 colored or half-breeds, 10,116 East Indians, and 481 Chinese. In 1900 the population was 753,115 (inclusive of the dependencies).

James River, of Virginia, called by the Indians Powhatan, and named by the English in honor of James I., is formed by the Jackson's and Cowpasture rivers, which unite near the N. extremity of Botetourt co. It runs eastward through the S. part of Rockbridge co. and effects a passage through the Blue Ridge at Balcony Falls, the scenery of which is very picturesque. It runs thence southeastward to Lynchburg, below which it flows north-eastward and forms the boundary between the cos. of Appomattox and Buckingham on the right and Amherst, Nelson, and Albemarle on the left hand. From Scottsville it pursues an ESE. direction to Richmond, where it rushes and tumbles over granite rocks and meets the tide about 150 miles from the ocean. Below this city it flows southeastward with a very tortuous course, and gradually expands into an estuary which is more than 50 miles long and at some places is nearly 5 miles wide. This estuary communicates with Chesapeake Bay through Hampton Roads. The main river is about 450 miles long. It is navigable for steamboats of about 150 tons to Richmond. Janina, yán'e-ná or ján'e-ná, Jannina, or Yanina, a town of European Turkey, capital of a vilayet of its own name, situated in the southern part of Albania (Epirus), near the Grecian frontier, on the little Lake of Janina (anc. Pambotis), 44 miles N. by W. of Arta. It is a busy, commercial, and industrial town, although its trade has greatly declined. A hundred years ago, when the strenuous but sanguinary Ali Pasha (the Lion of Janina) lorded it over the city and the surrounding country, Janina had some notable architectural features, but the lofty Iron Castle is now dilapidated and the fort on the lake a ruin, and the streets present a mean appearance in spite of the many mosques and churches. The manufactures include gold-woven and silk stuffs and morocco. There are several foreign consulates. The population is estimated at about 25,000, of whom more than one-half are Greeks, in whose hands is most of the trade and industry. The bulk of the remainder are Mohammedans, mainly Albanians, and there are many Jews. Janina rose to be an important place in the latter part of the Middle Ages.

Japan, called Nippon, niph'on, Nippon', or Dai (di) Nippon, by the Japanese, an insular empire of Asia, composed of the four large islands of Japan proper, Hondo (Honshu or Nippon), Kiushiu, Shikoku, and Yezo, together with Formosa, the southern half of Saghalin, the Kuril, Liu-kiu (Loo-choo), Bonin, and other islands. Area, 174,000 sq. m., of which 13,450 sq. m. belong to the island of Formosa. Pop. in Jan., 1904, 49,632,427, of which number 35,460,507 were on the main island (Hondo), 3,167,707 on Shikoku, 7,260,910 on Kiushiu, 843,717 on Yezo, and 2,899,586 on the island of Formosa.

The islands of Japan proper are included between the parallels of 30° and 45° 30' N. lat., and are disposed in crescentic form between the meridians (approx.) of 136° and 145° E. lon. Including its dependencies, the empire stretches on the N. to beyond lat. 50° and on the S. to lat. 22°, thus having a linear extent of upward of 2000 miles. All the main islands have irregular contours and are deeply indented with bays and harbors. The interior is ruggedly mountainous, various chains of granitic and other rocks, associated with a large number of volcanic cones, following axially in the line of the islands and sending off spurs and outcrops to the line of coast, where they abruptly terminate in steep cliffs. Most of the mountains are densely wooded and their included valleys highly cultivated. The loftiest summit of the empire is the non-volcanic Mount Morrison, in Formosa (13,595 feet). The most interesting of the Japanese mountains are the volcanoes, among which the famous Fujiyama, SW. of Tokyo, snow-covered and strikingly symmetrical in outline, holds first position (12,390 ft.). Other noted volcanic summits are Ontake, Tateyama (both about 10,000 ft. in height), Asamayama (about 8260 ft., in violent eruption in 1783), Aso-san (about 6600 ft., whose crater, 12 miles in diameter, is thought to be, with one exception, the largest in the world), and Bandai-san, which underwent a paroxysmal eruption in 1888. Most of the volcanoes are extinct or in a condition of dormancy. There are, however, numerous thermal springs and other indications of recent activity. Earthquakes are exceedingly numerous,—seemingly more so than in any other country in which the phenomena have been studied,—and some of them have been very destructive and productive (as those recurring in the Mino and Owari provinces in 1891-92) of great topographic changes.

The rivers of Japan are numerous and generally wide at their mouths, but their courses are short and they are not navigable for many miles inland. Many of them are of a torrential character and spread destruction along their banks. Of the lakes, the principal is Biwa, in the S. of Hondo, regarded by the Japanese with superstitious reverence and having shores of striking beauty. It is about 40 miles in length.

Climate and Productions.—The climate of the Japanese Empire partakes of tropical characteristics in the S. and of those of the subarctic tract in the N., and is in the central zone considerably influenced by the Japanese Gulf Stream, the Kuro-siwo. In the main islands, over all of which snow falls in greater or less quantity during the winter, the hottest period is usually from the middle of July to the middle of September. The mean annual temperature of Tokyo is 57°, with an absolute maximum of 98° and a minimum of 15°. Japan enjoys an abundant rainfall, the mean yearly precipitation (at Tokyo) being 58 inches. Destructive revolving storms, or typhoons, sometimes accompany the rains at the end of the summer heat, or in September. Along the coast of Yezo the sea at times freezes and the land is snow-bound for several months.

The flora of Japan is of marked luxuriance, and combines elements drawn from the tropics as well as from the temperate regions. Among the former are the bamboo and the sago-palm; among the latter, some of the most conspicuous are the pine, elm, maple, chestnut, beech, and oak. A variety of cedar, the Cryptomeria japonica, is one of the largest and most picturesque trees of the land, bordering the ancient highways and the approaches to famous shrines. Other trees are the ginko, or Salisburia, wax-tree (a species of Rhus), camphor-laurel, paper-mulberry, and the lacquer-tree. Many of the commoner fruits of the north, such as the apple, pear, peach, and fig, are cultivated, but the fruits are generally of an inferior quality; the Japanese orange and persimmon form, however, an exception to this rule. The cherry and plum are cultivated for their blossoms, and it is difficult to conceive of a landscape of greater beauty than that which is adorned by these magnificent products of the Japanese flora. The tea-plant, which furnishes one of the staples of the Japanese soil, thrives best in the central regions. The staple cereals are rice, barley, and rye. The production of rice in 1901 was about 220,000,000 bushels; of barley, about 43,000,000 bushels; of rye, about 34,000,000 bushels; and of wheat, about 20,000,000 bushels. In 1900 the product of the tea cultivated was 72,000,000 pounds, and of sugar, 170,000,000 pounds.

The fauna of Japan is essentially that of south-temperate Asia, with certain well-marked American types, and an infusion of tropical elements (monkey) in the south. Among the better-known quadrupeds may be mentioned the bear, boar, deer, fox, badger, squirrel, and hare; the domesticated animals, some of them introduced only at a very recent period, include the horse, cow, buffalo, sheep, pig, and dog; the animals of draught being the ox and buffalo. Japanese song-birds (lark and a species of nightingale) are few in species. Fish abound everywhere on the coast; the salmon and trout are numerous in some of the fresh-water streams.

The mineral productions of Japan are chiefly gold, silver, copper, iron, lead, coal, antimony, and sulphur, the yield of which in most cases is not very considerable. The product of copper in 1899 was 60,000,000 pounds, of iron, 54,000,000 pounds, and of antimony, 2,000,000 pounds. Coal was mined to the extent of 6,705,763 tons, the richest coal-fields being those of the islands of Kiushiu and Yezo.

Manufactures, Transportation.—In its manufactures Japan has taken a significant place among the nations of the world. Its people have long been famous for their handiwork in the making of sword-blades and other metallic goods, fine bronzes, silk and cotton fabrics, porcelain, lacquered and Japanned wares, and paper. Silk, cotton, and other textiles were manufactured in 1900 to the value of about $85,000,000. There were in the land, in 1900, 59 cotton-spinning mills, employing 16,154 men and 54,124 women. The first line of railway was opened in 1872, connecting Yokohama with the capital, 18 miles. The mileage of railroads in 1900-01 was 1010 of state railroads and 2905 of railroads owned by private companies, the two together carrying 113,000,000 passengers. Where railroads have not yet been introduced, the jinrikisha, or high-wheeled cart, patterned after a vehicle introduced from the United States, and drawn by natives, is the chief form of conveyance. The length of telegraph lines was, in 1901-02, 6377 miles; of telephone lines, in 1899, 1562 miles.

Education.—Elementary education is compulsory. The schools have all the grades from the elementary to the university. In 1900-01 there were 26,857 elementary schools. There are two universities, that of Tokyo, with colleges of law, medicine, literature, science, engineering, and agriculture, and that of Kyoto, with colleges of law, medicine, science, and engineering. Both of these institutions, as well as the bulk of other schools, are supported by the government. The former possesses a library of about 350,000 volumes. The number of books published in 1900 was 18,281, and of periodicals, 944.

Government, Defence.—The government of Japan is a constitutional monarchy, modelled after the pattern of western nations. The emperor, who bears the title of Mikado, exercises the executive powers with the advice of the cabinet ministers. There is also a privy council. The imperial diet, or parliament, is composed of a house of peers (numbering about 300 members) and a house of representatives, whose membership is fixed at 369. The house of peers consists of princes of the imperial family, nobles, persons nominated by the emperor as a reward for meritorious services to the state, and representatives of the largest tax-payers. Suffrage is limited by a tax-payment qualification. The emperor may declare war, make peace, and conclude treaties. The cabinet has 9 portfolios, those of foreign affairs, finance, interior, justice, war, navy, public instruction, agriculture and commerce, and communications. The capital of Japan is Tokyo. Until recently the actual seat of government was at Kyoto. The total effective force of the Japanese army, including the reserves, landwehr, etc., at the time of the outbreak of the war with Russia was about 625,000 men; the personnel of the navy was 35,000 men, including officers. The effective force of the Japanese fleet consisted of 98 vessels, of which 6 were battle-ships, 6 armored cruisers, 47 modern torpedo-boats, and 20 torpedo-boat destroyers. Extensive docks, arsenals, and barracks have been located at different ports, and there are important ship-building works at Nagasaki.

Commerce.—In 1901 the merchant navy of Japan (excluding Formosa) consisted of 1321 steamers of European type, 3850 sailing vessels of European type, and 911 native craft of various kinds. The following are some of the leading articles of export to foreign countries: rice, other food-stuffs, tea, silk (raw and manufactured, valued in 1901 at 109,000,000 yen, the yen being equivalent to about 49 cents), cotton yarn (21,465,000 yen), textiles, copper (13,904,000 yen), drugs and paints, watches (7,392,000 yen), floor-mats, and coal. The largest imports are those of rice, sugar (33,500,000 yen), wool and woollens, cotton and cotton-seed (60,650,000 yen), cotton manufactures, iron, steel, and manufactures of these metals (20,000,000 yen), fire-arms, machines, petroleum, etc.

In 1854 a general convention of peace and amity (the Perry Treaty) was signed between Japan and the United States, by which the ports of Shimoda and Hakodadi were opened to the ships of the latter. This was the beginning of a new era in the history of Japan, the policy of non-intercourse with the western world being gradually abandoned. Treaties were successively concluded with nearly all the Christian nations. The extra-territorial rights of foreigners in Japan have been abrogated, such aliens having the same privileges and obligations as the citizens of that country, except that they may not own land in Japan; Japanese subjects in foreign countries have as full rights as any other aliens, and Japan is now entirely open to foreigners for residence, trade, and industry. The chief ports opened for foreign trade are Yokohama, Kobe, Nagasaki, Moji, Shimonoeki, Hakodadi, and Niigata. An Imperial Commercial Museum for the exhibition of export and import products and the furtherance of trade has been established. A gold standard went into effect in 1897, with beneficial results, and there is a national banking system.

Political Divisions, Religion, etc.—Japan is divided (excepting Yezo, the Kuril Islands, and Formosa) into 3 fu (Tokyo, Kyoto, Osaka) and 43 ken, or prefectures. The subdivisions are gun (county), shi (municipality), cho (small town), and son (village). The system of justice is based on modern methods of jurisprudence. All religions are recognized, and there is no state religion or any state support. The ancient religion is Shintolism, with its numberless deities (some of them human beings), and its worship of nature. The Shinto temples and shrines, scattered all over the empire, number nearly 200,000. The majority of the population are adherents of Buddhism. The educated classes are largely followers of Confucius. There are many thousand Christians. The Japanese are of the Mongolian race. Their language is altogether different from that of the Chinese. In the island of Yezo dwell the Ainu (Ainus), a small tribe of uncertain ethnic affinities, who appear anciently to have been spread over a great part of Japan. Aino blood is supposed to be largely mingled with the Mongolian blood in the veins of the Japanese people.

History.—The Japanese records place the foundation of the reigning dynasty about the year 660 B.C. In the sixth century A.D. Buddhism entered the country, where it was received with such favor that in the following century it was proclaimed the national religion. In the course of the Middle Ages the supreme civil power became gradually divorced from the military power. The authority of the head of the state, the mikado, was reduced to a shadow, although the traditional honor still clung to his position. The virtual ruler was the shogun, who held the military power in his hands. The journeys of Rubruquis and Marco Polo to eastern Asia in the thirteenth century brought a knowledge of Japan to the peoples of Europe. In the sixteenth century the Portuguese came to Japan, entering into trade relations, and the Jesuits made numerous converts to Christianity. Before long, however, there was a violent revulsion against Christianity. The Portuguese were expelled, after which, for a brief period, the Dutch were allowed to have intercourse with Japan. Then for more than two centuries the empire was closed to the western world, until in 1854 Commodore Perry succeeded in inducing the government to enter into relations with the United States. In 1867-68 occurred the great revolution in which the shogunate was overthrown and the supreme power restored to the mikado. With the shogunate the system of landed feudal nobility which had prevailed under it, that of the daimios, came to an end. Japan now went through a process of transformation, regeneration, and material and intellectual progress unparalleled in history. The nation embraced the civilization of the West. A great military and naval power on modern lines was built up. In 1889 parliamentary government was instituted. In 1894-95 recreated Japan gave evidence of her strength in a victorious struggle with China. As a result of the war Japan acquired by cession Formosa and the Pescadores Islands. In the Boxer troubles in China, in 1900, her troops took a conspicuous part, in association with the allies, in quelling the insurrection and establishing peace. The years 1904-5 witnessed a war between Japan and Russia, growing out of the encroachments of the latter in Manchuria. In this struggle, which was virtually concluded by the treaty of Portsmouth, Sept. 5, 1905, Japan asserted her position as a military and naval power able to cope with almost any in the world. She forced Russia to withdraw from Manchuria, acquired possession of Port Arthur, received one-half of Saghalin, and was given a free hand in the control of the affairs of Korea. Among the larger cities of the empire are Tokyo, with a population, in 1904, of 1,818,655; Osaka, Kyoto, Nagoya, Kobe, Yokohama, Hiroshima, and Nagasaki.

Japan, Sea of, is that portion of the Pacific Ocean situated between the islands of Japan on the E. and the Russian Maritime Province and Korea on the W. It communicates with the main Pacific by Sangar (Tsugaru) Strait on the E., with the Sea of Okhotsk by the Gulf of Tartary and La Pérouse Strait on the N., and with the Eastern Sea by Korea Strait on the S. It is generally shallow (about 200 metres), especially on the Japanese side, but eastward of the Gulf of Korea there is a zone of great depth, exceeding 10,000 feet. It receives no important tributary.

Jassy, yá'see, or Yassy (Ruman, Jasi, yásh), a city of Rumania, the former capital of Moldavia, on an affluent of the Pruth, near the Russian frontier, about 200 miles NNE. of Bucharest. It was until recently altogether an unpretentious town, but now has a more modern appearance, good pavements having been introduced, as well as electricity for illumination and transportation. Many churches, one or two of which are interesting edifices, and a number of palaces of the boyars stand forth from among the vast collection of low houses. There is a stately government-building, facing a square, embellished with an equestrian statue of Stephen the Great, voyvode of Moldavia. Jassy has a university, installed in a recently erected edifice, a school of music, a school of art, etc. The town has little to show in the industrial field, but it carries on an active commerce. It is the seat of a Greek Orthodox metropolitan and of a Roman Catholic bishop. A peace was concluded here between Russia and Turkey in 1792, by which Russia received Otchakov and extended her frontiers to the Dniester. Pop. in 1899, 78,069, of whom half were Jews.

Jászó, yá'so', a town of Hungary, co. of Abauj-Torna, in a beautiful valley, on the Bodva, 30 miles SE. of Lont-schau. It contains an old Premonstratensian abbey, the church of which is one of the finest in Hungary.

Jatibonico, Rio, ree'o ná-tee-no-nee'ko, a river of Cuba, forms the boundary between Puerto Príncipe and Santa Clara provinces. It rises in the Jatibonico mountains, in the former province, flows S., and empties on the S. coast.

Játiva, há'té-vá, formerly San Filipe de Játiva (anc. Sat'abie), a town of Spain, in the province and 31 miles S. by W. of Valencia. It is picturesquely situated on the Albaida, an affluent of the Júcar, in a fruitful region, at the base of a mountain, on which are two castles. It has preserved in a considerable measure its Moorish aspect. The numerous fountains, fed by an aqueduct, are an attractive feature of the town. Among the buildings is a silk-exchange. In Roman times the place was celebrated for its linen. Játiva is the birthplace of Pope Alexander VI. and of the painter Ribera. Pop. in 1900, 12,602.

Jaico, Rio, ree'o hó'w'ko, a river of Cuba, empties over a sandy beach,  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile from the Playa Blanca, on the N. coast of Santiago de Cuba province. It is navigable for boats during the rainy season. A rocky point near its mouth has a cavern, Cueva de Jaico.

Jauer, yów'er, a town of Prussian Silesia, on the right bank of the Neisse, 10 miles SE. of Liegnitz. It has interesting churches and an ancient castle. There are manufactures of machinery, leather, cloth, carpets, cigars, carved wood-work, carriages, gloves, and sugar. It is noted for its sausages. Pop. in 1900, 13,024.

Jauernig, yów'er-nig, a town of Austrian Silesia, 52 miles NW. of Troppau. Pop. about 2000.

Jauja, hó'w'ná, or Atamajauja, á-tán-hó'w'ná, a river of Peru, joins the Apurimac 110 miles NE. of Huancavelica, after a very tortuous SE. and E. course of at least 400 miles. In its lower part it is called the Mantaro.

Jauja, or Atamajauja, a town of Peru, department of Junín, capital of a province of its own name, 115 miles E. by N. of Lima, on the E. bank of the river of the same name. It has considerable trade in rural produce and in cattle. Pop. about 3600. Silver-mines exist in the province. It is a health-station. Elevation, 11,100 feet.

Jaulna, jaw'ná, a town of British India, in Hyderabad, 34 miles ESE. of Aurangabad. It has a cantonment for troops. Pop. about 6000.

Jaulnay, shól'ná', a commune of France, in Vienne, arrondissement of Poitiers.

Jaumave, hó-wá'vá, a town and commune of Mexico, in the state of Tamaulipas, 38 miles SW. of Ciudad Victoria. Pop. about 10,000.

Jaun (Fr. Bellegarde), a village of Switzerland, in the canton of Fribourg, 10 miles E. of Bulle. It is the chief settlement in the Jauthal, a valley famous for its Gruyère cheese.

Jaunde, Kamerun. See JAUNDE.

Jaunpur, jó'w'n'poor, a town of British India, capital of the district of Jaunpur, in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, situated on the Gumti, 35 miles NW. of Benares. It was the seat of a mediæval Mohammedan kingdom. Pop. in 1901, 42,771.

Jaura, India. See JAORA.

Jauru, shó'w-roo', a river of Brazil, rises in the serra of its own name, in the state of Matto Grosso, flows SE., and joins the Paraguay after a course of about 220 miles.

Jauziers, shó'sé-á', a commune of France, in Basses-Alpes, 5 miles NE. of Barcelonnette.

Java, já'vá (Sanskrit, Yava, "millet"), an island in the Malay Archipelago, the principal seat of the Dutch power in the East, and, after Sumatra and Borneo, the largest in the Sunda group. It is bounded N. by the Java Sea and S. by the Indian Ocean, separated W. by the Strait of Sunda from Sumatra, and E. by that of Bali from the island of Bali. Lat. 5° 52'-8° 51' S.; lon. 105° 10'-114° 30' E. Its shape somewhat resembles a parallelogram, the greater axis lying E. and W., with a slight inclination N. at the W. end. The island is 630 miles long by 35 to 120 miles broad. Area, inclusive of the adjoining island of Madura (which has about 2000 sq. m.), 50,554 sq. m.

Physical Aspects.—The S. coast of Java presents a continuous front of crags and rocks, forming the outer edge of an extremely mountainous country; the N. is flat and low, and covered in many places with mangrove swamps. The principal capes and bays along its coast are Java Head, at the entrance of the Strait of Sunda from the Indian Ocean; Cape St. Nicholas, where that strait opens into the Java Sea; Cape Panka at the W. and Cape Sendano at the E. entrance of the Strait of Madura; capes East and South, at the SE. extremity of Java; Wyncoop's, Welcome, and Pepper bays, at the W. end of the island; Bantam and Batavia bays, on the NW.; Rembang on the N.; and along the S. coast from W. to E., Penanjong, Pachitan, Pangol, Sambreng, Segara-Wedi, Dampar, and Gradjagan bays. The chief harbors are those of Batavia and Surabaya, on the N., and that of Chililatjap, formed by the small island of Kembangan, on the S.

The island is traversed throughout its whole length by chains of mountains, which are thickly set with volcanoes, active and extinct, varying generally from 6000 to 9000 feet in height; some of them, rising to even 12,000 ft., form landmarks to the navigator. About one-half of the 50 or more volcanic peaks are active. Among the most noted summits are Semeru, in the E. group of mountains, constituting the culminating point of the island, 12,100 ft.; Tengger, also in the E. group, 8930 ft., having a crater about 6 miles in diameter; Galunggung, in the western mountains, famous for its destructive eruptions of 1822; Papandayang, about 8600 ft.; Guntur, and Slamet (11,240 ft.).

The mountains are intersected by large and beautiful valleys, watered by rivers and torrents, and covered, for the most part, with thick forests. A multitude of rivers flow from the N. and S. sides of the mountains, affording supplies to innumerable artificial water-courses used in irrigation. These streams are generally rapid, shallow, and encumbered with sand-banks. The only rivers navigable for vessels to any distance inland are the Solo, Kediri, Tji-manok, and Tji-tarum; the others are only suitable for canoes or for floating timber. The formation of the island is essentially volcanic, but there are areas of Tertiary and Quaternary (fossiliferous) sediments. Granite is found in some parts of the W., but the plutonic rocks are limited. The island has no extensively wrought metallic deposits. The Bantam coal-mines yield lignite; naphtha and asphalt abound in various localities; and the salines of Kuwu, SE. of Samarang, yield a large supply of salt. Warm medicinal waters are very plentiful. The volcanoes, when in an active state, are remarkable for the quantity of sulphur and sulphurous vapors they discharge. An extinct volcano near Batar, called Guevo Upas, or the Vale of Poison, about half a mile around, is held in horror by the natives on account of its (assumed) deadly atmosphere of carbonic vapors.

Climate.—Java was formerly considered very unhealthy; but, with the exception of a few marshy districts on the N. coast and some parts on the S., the climate is as salubrious as that of most intertropical countries, and the more elevated regions are even remarkably healthy. In the plains the temperature during the day is from 85° to 94° and during the night from 73° to 80°. At Batavia (one of the unhealthy places) the daily range of the thermometer is from about 70° to 90°. The average annual rainfall there is about 75 inches (the amount varying greatly from year to year), which is increased to 185 inches on the hill-station of Buitenzorg. Over a large part of the island (not, however, in the west where Batavia is situated) there is a dry season from April to October, while the rest of the year is a season of rains. Thunder-storms are common, but hurricanes are rare. The island is subject to earthquake shocks.

Fauna.—The mammalian types of Java are numerous. Though so close to Sumatra and the Malay Peninsula, neither the elephant nor the tapir is found in the island; but in the W. part the one-horned rhinoceros is not uncommon, and in numerous districts the tiger, leopard, and tiger-cat keep the inhabitants in alarm by their depredations. The babiroussa, wild dog, deer, and several species of ape form part of the larger game. The lemurs inspire the inhabitants with superstitious fear by their mysterious nocturnal habits; and this island may be considered the native seat of the largest bats, some of which measure several feet across the wings. Civets are common, and supply a perfume of which the Javanese are passionately fond; the wild ox (Bos sondaicus), a beautiful and graceful animal, which has been found untamable, abounds in the woods; and the buffalo, said to have been brought from continental Asia in the twelfth century by the same prince to whom tradition assigns the introduction of the rice-plant, is the chief animal used in agricultural labor. There are about 2,700,000 buffaloes in the land, and perhaps a smaller number of cows and oxen. Among the birds of Java may be mentioned the peacock, jungle-fowl, partridges, pigeons, fruit-doves, etc.

Vegetation, Agriculture, etc.—Java possesses a soil of astonishing fertility and a vegetation unsurpassed in its luxuriance. Behind the coast-line, which is fringed with cocoanut-trees, the ground rises gently to the foot of the mountain-chain and is everywhere cultivated. Javanese villages of bamboo houses, surrounded with hedges of fruit-trees, the banana, and bamboo, contrast agreeably with the vast fields of rice, artificially watered, and yielding often three harvests annually. The bases of the mountains are covered with vast forests of different species of the fig-tree or rubber. At an elevation of 5000 feet are heavy growths of Podocarpus cupressus (a tree allied to the yew and furnishing the best timber in Java), the Dammar pine, rhododendrons, and the Dipteris or two-leaved fern. Laurels of numerous species, chestnuts, oaks, melastomes, eugenias, magnolias, myrtles, numerous orchids, etc., grow still higher up the mountains. At about 7000 feet the vegetation changes its aspect. Many plants of European types (various heaths, the raspberry, honeysuckle, St. John's wort, violet, buttercup, cowslip, guelder-rose, cypress) appear on the higher zones. The famed poison-tree, the Upas (Antiaris toxicaria), is a noted Javanese plant. Forests of teak cover very extended areas.

Rice forms the staple food of the natives and is raised in enormous quantities. Coffee, sugar, tobacco, tea, indigo, copra, pepper, and cinchona are among the staples of the island. The cultivation of nutmegs, cloves, cinnamon, pimento, rubber, and cacao is carried on with success. The population is almost wholly agricultural. There are but few large towns. Most of the soil is claimed as government property. A system of compulsory labor exists to some extent, the peasants being obliged to give a certain amount of their labor to the government or private land-owners in the cultivation of coffee. The yield of sugar in 1899 was 796,000 tons; in 1900, 710,000 tons. The production of coffee in 1900 was 106,506,933 pounds; of tea, 6,636,571 kilograms; of tobacco, 21,737,198 kilograms; of cinchona, 5,669,695 kilograms; of indigo, 716,556 kilograms. The chief articles of export include sugar, copra, coffee, rice, tobacco, tea, tapioca, cinchona, tin, teak, hides, pepper, and cocoa, the quantity of the first being, in 1901, 726,110,000 kilograms. The great bulk of the foreign trade is carried on through the ports of Batavia, Samarang, and Surabaya, and is chiefly in the hands of the Dutch and Chinese. There were about 1200 miles of railway in operation in 1901.

Government.—Java is administered by the governor-general of the Dutch East Indies, whose seat of government is Batavia. He is assisted by a council of 5 members and by the directors of the various departments of the administration. The island (together with Madura) is divided into 17 districts, called "residencies." At the head of each is a resident, under whom are assistant residents and comptrollers. The lower administrative offices are filled by natives. In each residency a "regent," selected by the government from the old nobility, is appointed, who is the intermediary between the native officials and the Dutch. The sultanates of Jokjakarta and Surakarta have been allowed to continue their existence, the sultans, however, retaining but a shadow of power. The administration of law, as far as natives are concerned, is in accordance with the old national customs. Among the educational or scientific institutions of the island is the famous botanical garden of Buitenzorg, which surpasses all the botanical gardens of the world in the wealth and variety of its tropical productions.

Inhabitants, Religion, etc.—The Javanese belong to the Malay family. They consist of the Javanese proper, the Sundanese, and the Madurese, speaking distinct dialects of the Javanese language. The Javanese early developed a high degree of civilization through commercial contact with India, and in the Middle Ages an extensive Javanese literature came into existence. The ancient literary language is the Kavi, which is to the modern dialects of Java what Sanskrit is to the modern Hindu tongues of India. There is a large infusion of Sanskrit words in Kavi, as well as in modern Javanese. The art of India was transplanted to Java, which has splendid architectural remains, Hindu and Buddhist. The vast temple of Boro Budor is the most imposing monument of Buddhist architecture in the world. Hinduism and Buddhism gave way at the close of the Middle Ages to Islam. The great mass of the Javanese profess Mohammedanism, but spirit-worship pervades the population. Pop., with Madura, in 1891, 24,133,685; in 1900, 28,745,698, of whom nearly 60,000 were Europeans and about 290,000 Chinese. There are between 15,000 and 20,000 Arabs.

History.—In the Middle Ages Java became the seat of powerful Hindu realms. These crumbled with the spread of Islam among the people just before the advent of the Europeans. The Portuguese made their way to the island early in the sixteenth century, but at its close they were supplanted by the Dutch. At this time the two principal native states were Mataram and Bantam, which had arisen on the ruins of the Hindu kingdoms. The Dutch conquest was not completed until the first half of the nineteenth century. About the middle of the eighteenth century the realm of Mataram, after having been reduced to vassalage, was divided into the sultanates of Surakarta and Jokjakarta, which still linger on. The state of Bantam disappeared a hundred years ago. The Dutch East India Company was dissolved at the close of the eighteenth century. Java was in the hands of the English from 1811 to 1816, during which time it was ably administered by Sir S. T. Raffles.

Java, a post-village of Neshoba co., Miss. The banking point is Newton. Pop. about 300.

Java, a post-township (town) of Wyoming co., N.Y., about 30 miles SE. of Buffalo. It contains the villages of Java (pop. 100) and Java Village. Pop. in 1900, 1776.

Jersey, jer'-see (anc. Cæsarea), the largest and southernmost of the Channel Islands, belonging to Great Britain, in the English Channel, 15 miles W. of the coast of France (Cotentin) and 90 miles S. by E. of the Isle of Portland. Lat. of St. Helier  $49^{\circ} 11' N.$ ; lon.  $2^{\circ} 7' W.$  Length, from E. to W., 11 miles; average breadth, 4 miles. Area, 45 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 52,796. The coasts are rocky and abrupt, and the only considerable inlet is St. Aubin's Bay, on the S. side. The whole island appears like a continuous orchard dotted with picturesque villages. The surface is undulating, the hill-ranges enclosing fertile valleys. The climate is very mild, the mean annual temperature being  $51.5^{\circ}$  and the January temperature,  $42^{\circ}$ . The annual rainfall is about 34 inches. Leading articles of export are apples, pears, cider, potatoes, butter, and cows of an excellent breed ("Jerseys" or "Alderneys"). Off the SE. coast are extensive oyster-beds, resorted to by a large fishing-fleet belonging to the island. The trade is active (with England, France, and Canada), and the people of Jersey engage largely in the Newfoundland fishery. Numbers of vessels are annually built in Jersey. Steamers communicate frequently with Southampton, Saint-Malo, and other ports. The island is the residence of numerous English families, but French is the language of the native people. Jersey has its own legislature, the "states," or insular parliament, consisting of 50 members and of a presiding officer, their acts being confirmed or annulled, in special cases, by the lieutenant-governor, the chief executive of the island. From the decisions of its royal court appeal lies only to the sovereign in council. The inhabitants preserve many Norman feudal customs. The principal towns are St. Helier (the capital) and St. Aubin. Jersey is an agreeable place of resort and is somewhat noted as a winter sanitarium; but its climate is less mild and equable than that of Guernsey. The island abounds in old buildings of much antiquarian interest.

Jersey, a southwestern county of Illinois, bordering on Missouri, has an area of 360 sq. m. It is bounded on the S. by the Mississippi River and on the W. by the Illinois River, and is partly drained by Macoupin Creek. Picturesque bluffs extend along the Mississippi River. Coal is found here. Capital, Jerseyville. Pop. in 1890, 14,810; in 1900, 14,612.

Jersey City, capital of Hudson co., N.J., on the right or W. bank of the Hudson River, at its entrance into New York Bay and opposite New York city, from which it is 1 mile distant and with which constant communication is maintained by several lines of ferries. It adjoins Hoboken on the N. and Newark Bay and the Hackensack River on the W. It is a terminus of several important lines of railroad,—as the Pennsylvania, the Central R. of New Jersey, the Erie, the Lehigh Valley, the West Shore, etc.,—and it has also the piers of a number of Transatlantic lines of steamers. Immense quantities of iron, coal, produce, and general merchandise are brought and shipped from here. Among the more notable buildings and institutions are the city-hall, court-house, public library (with upward of 100,000 volumes), various hospitals, etc. Among the educational institutions are Hasbrouck Institute, St. Peter's College, St. Dominic's Academy, and St. Mary's Academy.

Jersey City has many and various manufacturing industries, among which the more important are extensive tobacco manufactories, crucible-works, foundries and machine-shops, boiler-works, locomotive and railroad-supply manufactories, car-works, large sugar-refineries, silk-mills, numerous saw-works, glass-works, breweries, planing-mills, potteries, manufactories of chemicals, jewelry, fireworks, lead-pencils, automobiles, candles, soap, hydrants, rubber goods, castor and linseed oils, copper-ware, oakum, chains and spikes, car-springs, stoves, steam heaters, etc. Here are located large stock-yards and an extensive abattoir where vast quantities of cattle and sheep are slaughtered for the New York markets. This establishment was opened in 1874 and is one of the largest, most complete, and best appointed in the United States. The slaughtering of hogs is carried on upon the Hackensack meadows, beyond the city limits. The site whereon Jersey City stands was formerly called Paulus Hook. In 1820 the place was chartered as "the City of Jersey," which was changed in a subsequent charter (in 1838) to "Jersey City." The population in 1850 was 6856; in 1860, 29,226; in 1870, 82,546; in 1880, 120,722; in 1890, 163,003; in 1900, 200,433.

Jerte, or Kerte, hért's, a small town of Spain, province and 66 miles NNE. of Cáceres.

Jerusalem, je-ru'-sa-lém (Hebrew, Jerushala'im; Gr. Iερουσόλυμα, Hierosóluma; L. Hierosolyma; Arab. El-Kude, "the Holy"), a city of Palestine, the seat of the most important events described in the Bible, now comprised in the Turkish dominions. It is situated in the mountain region between the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea, 35 miles SE. of its port, Jaffa, with which it is connected by a railway 54 miles long, and 15 miles W. of the northern end of the Dead Sea. Lat.  $31^{\circ} 47' N.$ ; lon.  $35^{\circ} 13' E.$  The city stands on a rocky plateau at an elevation of about 2500 feet above the level of the sea. On the E. is the deep-out valley of Kidron (or of Jehoshaphat), beyond which rises the Mount of Olive, and on the W. and S. is the tortuous valley of Hinnom, the two depressions meeting in the southeastern outskirts of the city, about 500 ft. below the level of its site. The southern half of the modern town represents roughly the site of the main portion of ancient Jerusalem (the upper city), which was separated on the E. by a long depression, the Valley of Tyropeon, now largely obliterated by the debris of centuries, from the City of David (or Zion) and Mount Moriah (or the Temple Hill), to which the name Zion was afterwards applied. David's City is not included within the present walls. Beyond the walls, mainly on the NW., an extensive new quarter has sprung up within the last 50 years. The city within the walls is divided into the Christian quarter, in the NW.; the Mohammedan, in the NE.; the Jewish, in the SE.; and the Armenian, in the SW. The streets are mostly narrow and there are many arched passages. The dwellings are for the most part massively built of hewn stone and frequently consist of a number of detached apartments. The roofs are flat, but a large number of the houses have low cupolas, a single dwelling often having several. The many establishments that serve the needs of tourists and the various educational and philanthropic institutions detract greatly from the mediæval and oriental appearance of the city. The modern walls of Jerusalem were built by Sultan Solymán the Magnificent in the first half of the sixteenth century, and rest, except in the S., in great part upon ancient foundations. They are of hewn stone, about 40 feet in height, and have a circuit of about 2½ miles. They are surmounted by numerous towers and pierced by 8 gates (one of them walled up), the principal being the Jaffa Gate, the Damascus Gate, and the Abdul-Hamid Gate.

The most striking and interesting feature of Jerusalem is the Haram esh-Sherif ("the distinguished sanctuary"), occupying the site of the Temple Hill. It is a rectangle about 500 yards long and about 300 yards wide. This area is still partly enclosed by walls, which on the E. side form a part of the outer wall of the city, and both here and at the SW. corner are portions composed of stones of vast size dating from the early period of the existence of the city. In the centre of the Haram esh-Sherif, upon a platform paved with marble, stands the magnificent mosque called Kubbet es-Sakhra (the "dome of the rock,"—i.e., the sacred rock), an octagonal structure surmounted by an imposing dome. This edifice, the chief architectural feature of Jerusalem, which is generally known as the Mosque of Omar, was erected by the caliph Abd ul-Melik (685-705). On the southern edge of the Haram esh-Sherif is another celebrated ancient mosque, the Masjid el-Aksa. A short distance to the north of the temple area extends the Via Dolorosa (Road of Suffering). In the Christian quarter, about a third of a mile W. of the Kubbet es-Sakhra, stands the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, on the site of a church built by Constantine. The present edifice dates from the latter part of the Middle Ages, but much of it represents restoration and rebuilding at various times. North of the Haram esh-Sherif, on the ancient Bezetha, is the mediæval church of Saint Anne, recently restored by the French. Close to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, on a large open place called Muristan, is the German Church of the Redeemer, consecrated in 1898. Among the many other ecclesiastical edifices in the city may be mentioned the great Greek monastery, the Coptic and Franciscan monasteries, the Armenian monastery of Saint James, and the Latin patriarchal church. The Orthodox Greek Church possesses a large number of convents. Just outside of the city, on the western declivity of the Mount of Olives, is the Gethsemane Church of the Russians; and in the north-western suburbs, in the Russian settlement, is the Russian cathedral. The Jews have over 70 synagogues. On the Mount of Olives is the Church of the Ascension. Jerusalem has a vast number of religious and educational establishments, hospitals, and other philanthropic institutions belonging to the various churches and religious orders and to different nationalities. These are to a great extent in the suburbs, where are also the European consulates. There are about 20 Jewish colonies in the outskirts of the city. Close to the Jaffa Gate is the citadel, with massive walls and towers, dating in part from ancient times. The remains of ancient Jerusalem, outside of the vast accumulations of débris, are scanty, consisting mainly of portions of the old walls, cisterns, pools, water-conduits, and burial-places. Near what was the southern end of the old City of David, about a quarter of a mile away from the modern city-wall, is the pool of Siloam. The tunnel, 1700 feet in length, which was excavated in the time of the kings of Judah to supply this pool, has recently been discovered. To the N. of the city are the burial-places which, from the mediæval legends that grew up about them, have come to be known as the "tombs of the kings and of the judges." The trade and industries of Jerusalem are unimportant. The city is the capital of the mutessarriflik of Jerusalem. It is the seat of a Roman Catholic, a Greek, and an Armenian patriarch, and of an Anglican bishop. The population is about 60,000, of whom about two-thirds are Jews, the remainder being about two-thirds Christians and one-third Mohammedans.

Jerusalem is mentioned as early as 1400 B.C. in the Egyptian records. About 400 years later it became the capital of the Hebrew kingdom. On the disruption of the realm, after the death of Solomon, it was the capital of the kingdom of Judah. In 586 B.C. it was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylonia. The Jews were permitted to rebuild it under the Persians. After the Persians it passed successively under the sway of Macedon, Egypt, and Syria. It was the capital again of an independent Jewish state under the Maccabees in the second and first centuries B.C., after whose fall it rose to great splendor under Herod the Great, when Judæa had become a dependency of Rome. In A.D. 70 the city was destroyed by the Romans under Titus. In the following century the emperor Hadrian founded a new city on its site, which he named Ælia Capitolina. The city was the capital of the Christian kingdom of Jerusalem, established by the Crusaders, from 1099 to 1187. It has been in the hands of the Ottoman Turks since 1516.

Jura, joo'rá (Fr. pron. shū'rá'), a chain of mountains which separates France from Switzerland, extending in France from the department of Ain to the borders of Alsace, and in Switzerland along the cantons of Vaud, Neuchâtel, and Bern, whence in broken masses it is continued to the Rhine. Beyond this river, in Württemberg and Bavaria, a series of irregular elevations, having a largely identical geological structure, are known as the Swabian and the Franconian Jura. The main or typical Jura is composed of a series of parallel ranges, extending for 180 miles in the form of a curve, from S. to NE., with a mean breadth of 30 miles; these are separated by long valleys, which are traversed by streams flowing N. and S. The culminating point is the Crêt-de-la-Neige, in France, 12 miles W. by N. of Geneva, 5650 feet; the highest summits in Switzerland are the Dôle, 8 miles W. by N. of Nyon, 5509 ft., and the Mont Tendre, of nearly the same elevation. The best known passes are those of Pontarlier and the Col de la Faucille, the latter (4355 ft.), a few miles SW. of the Dôle, commanding a famous view. The chief geological feature is the Jura limestone. Here are found also Cretaceous gypsums, alabaster, beds of asphalt (Val Travers), marble, abundance of iron, and mineral springs. There are numerous cascades and stalactite grottoes in the mountains, and their summits are covered with fine forests. Wolves and the brown bear are occasionally met with. The vine is cultivated in the valleys and cattle are extensively reared. The Swabian Jura rises in its highest point to about 3300 ft.

Jura, an island, one of the Inner Hebrides, Scotland, co. of Argyll, immediately NE. of Islay. Length, 24 miles. Near its S. extremity are 3 lofty peaks, termed the "Paps of Jura." On the E. is the harbor of Small Islands; on the W. is the deep inlet Loch Tarbet. Principal village, Jura, on the E. coast. Pop. about 600.

Jura, joo'rá (Fr. pron. shū'rá'), a department of France, part of the old province of Franche-Comté, bordering on Switzerland. Area, 1928 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 261,288. It is situated almost entirely in the basin of the Rhone. The surface is mostly covered with ramifications of the

Jura mountains. Principal rivers are the Oignon, Doube, Loue, Seille, and Ain. The soil is rich and fertile in the valleys. Cheese is made in large quantities. The wine is of good quality. The mineral products include iron, coal, salt, and marble. Capital, Lons-le-Saunier.

Kaffa, a town of Russia. See FRUDOSIA.

Kaffa, or Go'mara, a country of east-central Africa, S. of Abyssinia, of which it is a dependency. It is a lofty plateau drained in part by the Omo river. It is by many assumed to be the native country of the coffee-plant (the káwa of the Arabs), and much of the coffee exported from Mocha arrives in that market from the N. frontier of Kaffa and the S. part of Enarea. The language of the inhabitants belongs to the Hamitic group, and they call themselves Christians. The town of Bonga is an important mart.

Kaffraria, a populous and fertile region of southeast Africa, in Cape Colony, bordering on the Indian Ocean and now chiefly comprised in the districts or divisions of Pondoland, Griqualand East, Tembuland, and Transkei. The region is mountainous, especially in the W., and is traversed or watered by several streams (Bashi, Umtata, Umsimvubu, Kei, and Umtamvuna). The native inhabitants, called Kafirs or Kaffres, before 1785 extended their dominion to the Great Fish River, in lat.  $33^{\circ} 27'$  S. The breadth of the territory from the mountains to the sea is from 80 to 90 miles.

The mountains which run parallel to the sea-coast, bounding Kaffraria on the NW., rarely exceed the height of 3000 feet. The level plains terminate about 20 miles from the sea; then follows a land of hill and dale extremely varied and picturesque. The chief vegetable products are maize, millet, and watermelons. From May to August it seldom rains. In summer the rainy season sets in with terrific thunder-storms. In spring the temperature of the plains seldom exceeds  $50^{\circ}$ ; in summer it is between  $70^{\circ}$  and  $90^{\circ}$ , and before storms it frequently rises to upward of  $100^{\circ}$ .

The Kafirs are tall and well formed. Their color is a dark iron-gray; except thick lips, they have no negro feature. They are hospitable, intelligent, and brave. Polygamy is practised.

Kafiristan, ká'fe-ris-tán' ("land of the Kafirs," an Arabic name signifying "unbelievers"), a country on the borders of Afghanistan and British India, constituting a dependency of the former. It lies between lat.  $35^{\circ}$  and  $36^{\circ}$  N. and lon.  $69^{\circ} 20'$  and  $71^{\circ} 20'$  E. and borders on Kabulistan, Khundus, Badakhshan, and Chitral. Estimated area, 5000 sq. m. It is situated on the S. declivity of the Hindu-Kush and is drained by affluents of the Kabul river. Its narrow but fertile valleys produce an abundance of fruits, with barley, wheat, and millet, and feed large herds of cattle, sheep, and goats. The inhabitants, a warlike Aryan people, number between 100,000 and 200,000. They claim descent from the Greeks of Alexander the Great and exhibit perpetual enmity towards Mohammedans.

Kain, káin, or Gain, a town of Persia, in Khorassan, 230 miles ENE. of Yezd. It was formerly an important place, significant strategically, but its population has dwindled down to about 5000.

Kainsk, káinsk, a town of Asiatic Russia, government of Tomsk, on the Om and on the Siberian railway, 260 miles WSW. of Tomsk. Pop. in 1897, 5353.

Kaipara, ká-pá'rá, a fine harbor of New Zealand, in North Island, on its W. coast, in lat.  $36^{\circ} 30'$  S., lon.  $174^{\circ} 75'$  E. Average breadth, from 5 to 6 miles. It receives several considerable rivers, including the Wairoa at the N. and the Kaipara at the S. extremity.

Kai-ping, k'i'ping', a town of China, in the province of Chi-li, 72 miles NE. of Tien-tsin, with which it is connected by rail. There are extensive and largely operated coal-mines in the vicinity.

Kaira, k'i'rā, a town of British India, capital of Kaira district, Gujerat, 265 miles N. of Bombay. Pop. about 10,000.

Kairwan, kir'wān', a city of Tunis, 30 miles WSW. of Susa, with which it is connected by rail. Lat.  $35^{\circ} 37' N.$ ; lon.  $10^{\circ} 15' E.$  Pop. (inclusive of suburbs), about 26,000. It stands on a sandy desert plain, and has a large citadel, magnificent mosques, numerous remains of antiquity, and manufactures of morocco-leather boots and slippers, copper-ware, etc. It has a large caravan-trade. Kairwan was founded by the Arabs about the close of the seventh century, and for several centuries it was a great seat of Mohammedan power and famous as a centre of theological learning. It is the holiest of the Mohammedan cities of Africa. It was occupied by the French in 1881.

Kaisariyeh, ki'sar-ee'eh (anc. Masaca and Cesarea), one of the most important cities of Asia Minor, at the N. foot of Mount Argæus, 160 miles ENE. of Konieh. It is partly enclosed by a dilapidated wall, and has a picturesque old castle and an interesting mediæval mosque. There are extensive and well-supplied bazaars. Near by are remains of both the ancient and a subsequent Mohammedan city. Kaisariyeh is the entrepôt for a large extent of country. In the vicinity are fine pear and apricot orchards and vineyards and many fine residences. The city is the seat of a Greek bishop, an Armenian archbishop, and a Roman Catholic bishop. The ancient Cesarea figures prominently in the early history of Christianity. In the third century it is said to have contained several hundred thousand inhabitants. Population estimated at about 70,000, the Armenians and Greeks constituting a large fraction.

Kaisariyeh, Palestine. See CESAREA.

Kanosh Pass, Colo., a depression in the Kanosha range, has an elevation of about 10,200 feet. Lat. 39° 25' N.

Kanosh Twin Cones, Colo., two peaks of the Rocky Mountains, each about 12,350 feet high. They are 1½ miles apart. The eastern is in lat. 39° 24' N., lon. 105° 40' W.

Kanowra, a country of Africa. See BORNU.

Kan-pu, an ancient town of China, province of Che-kiang, at the head of a considerable bay, 32 miles SW. of Cha-pu. It was originally the port of Hang-chow, but is now deserted.

Kansas, kan'sas, a state of the American Union, bounded N. by Nebraska, E. by Missouri, S. by Indian Territory and Oklahoma, and W. by Colorado. Its northern line is the 40th degree of N. lat.; its eastern limit is partly the Missouri River and partly the meridian of 94° 38' W.; the southern boundary is on the line of the 37th degree of N. lat.; and it extends westward to 102° W. lon. Area of the land-surface, 81,700 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, 390 sq. m. In this state is the geographical centre of the United States domain, exclusive of Alaska.

Face of the Country.—The surface is chiefly a gently rolling prairie, and there are no water-falls with a greater descent than 7 feet, and few mill-dams can be made to give as much as 10 ft. fall. The elevation of the extreme NW. is 4000 ft., with the highest point in the state rising to about 4400 ft.; that of the extreme SW. 3400 ft.; and nearly the whole state slopes to the east and south, with the average fall of 7½ ft. to the mile. In the SW. there are tracts of sand-hill country abounding in native small fruits. There are no mountains, no marshes of any extent except a few valuable salt-marshes, almost no sloughs, and only a few small and shallow lakes or ponds. The river-bottoms throughout most of the state contain more or less timber, including ash, elm, hackberry, cottonwood, box-elder, black walnut, sycamore, pecan, oak, hickory, mulberry, bass, chicot, maple, and other species; but the western half of the state is very scantily supplied. The original timber-land did not cover more than 5 per cent. of the state's area, but a judicious system of planting has considerably increased the extent of the woodland.

Rivers.—The Missouri forms a portion of the eastern boundary and is an important commercial highway. Its principal affluent in the state is the Kansas River, which, with its longest branch, the Smoky Hill Fork, traverses the whole length of the state from W. to E. The Kansas River has been navigated as far as Fort Riley by steamers, but the construction of bridges and dams has interfered with this steam-navigation. The Republican, Solomon, Saline, Marais des Cygnes, Blue, Neosho, Arkansas, and Cimarron are the other principal streams. Many of these, as well as their tributaries, afford water-power, and at some points irrigation has been undertaken, but as yet not on a large scale.

Geology and Minerals.—The Permian and Carboniferous formations cover the eastern third of the state, which has yielded considerable coal. The quantity of coal mined in 1899 was 3,852,267 short tons, valued at $4,478,112; in 1903 the yield was 5,839,976 tons. In the W. part of the state there is a region covered by Pliocene deposits abounding in mammalian remains. The remainder of the state is mostly of Cretaceous age, but some 3000 sq. m. of its high prairies and hills are overlaid by patches of Pliocene strata. The Cretaceous beds abound in fossil remains and yield much lignite and fossil wood. Other minerals of economic value are limestone, gypsum, sandstone, flagstones, good chalk (in the W.), lead, zinc (the latter mined and smelted at several points), salt (abundant in the salines, and yielding about 2,000,000 barrels annually), fire-clay, ochre, black shales, hydraulic limestone, etc. Natural gas occurs in the SE. section and has become a valuable commercial product. The petroleum wells are largely developed, the yield of oil in 1903 being 932,214 barrels, valued at $988,236. In 1900 the output of lead-ore was 5059 tons; of zinc, 57,275 short tons.

Vegetation, Animal Life.—The principal trees of the state have already been named. To these may be added certain fruit-bearing trees and shrubs, such as the apple, plum, and cherry, which are now extensively cultivated. The native grasses of all parts of the state afford excellent pasturage, which endures throughout the year. Considerable plantations of trees have been made: the locust, alanthus, eucalyptus, and the more rapidly growing native trees are favorites. The vast plains of Kansas were until comparatively recently the pasture-grounds of great numbers of bison, antelopes, and wild horses, but of these practically nothing now remains. The state is still the autumnal resort of many sportsmen, for its wild lands are the breeding-ground of countless grouse and other game-birds. The rivers contain some useful food-fishes, including the gar-pike, sturgeon, paddle-fish, perch, eel, cat-fish, sucker, and river-herring. The state has had several visitations of the Rocky Mountain locust or "hateful" grasshopper (Caloptenus spretus). Among the mammals now remaining or only recently driven beyond the boundaries of the state are the panther, lynx, wolf, fox, Texas civet, raccoon, bear, deer, opossum, hare, prairie-dog, and many small species.

Climate.—The winters are often severe, with high winds, but the air is so dry that the cold is easily endured. The snow-fall is slight, especially southward, and the winter is much shorter than in the northern Atlantic states. In the extreme W. the rainfall is scanty, but it is ordinarily sufficient for a pastoral country. The E. seldom suffers from drought, for the rainfall, though relatively small, is quite evenly distributed throughout the year. The mean annual rainfall for the state is about 26 inches, ranging from 15 inches in the W. to 40 inches in the E. The S. is quite within the cotton-belt, and some attention has been paid to cotton-growing in the SE.

Agricultural Resources.—The bottom-, bench- and table-lands of Kansas are for the most part a rich black loam of the highest agricultural excellence. Winter and spring wheat, corn, rye, oats, and potatoes are the great staples, and large crops of sorghum, broom-corn, hay, hemp, flax, flaxseed, castor-beans, tobacco, etc., are produced. An immense business is done in fattening and shipping cattle, which are partly native-bred and partly driven in from Texas and the Cherokee country. Sheep-husbandry is attracting much attention, and to it the state is finely adapted. Dairy-farming is also largely on the increase. The leading agricultural crops in 1900 were: corn, 163,870,630 bushels; wheat, 82,488,655 bushels; oats, 43,063,943 bushels; barley, 4,186,893 bushels; rye, 1,922,481 bushels; potatoes, 7,246,224 bushels; and hay, 4,031,461 tons. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 2,165,728 pounds.

Industries.—Slaughtering and meat-packing is a leading industry of the state, and its products were in 1900 valued at $77,411,883. The chief seat of this industry is Kansas City. The manufacture of soap and candles and of cheese, butter, and condensed milk is very extensive. The beet-sugar industry is also important. Other important manufactures are those of lumber, flour, furniture and cabinet goods, castings, metallic wares, woollens, castor and linseed oils, dressed stone, paint, ground plaster, lime, glass, salt, syrup, bricks, leather, cheese, carriages, machinery, cigars, brooms, wine, and beer.

Education.—There is a state university at Lawrence and a state agricultural college at Manhattan, both free to youth of either sex. Among the collegiate institutions are the Kansas City University; Baker University, at Baldwin; Bethany College, at Lindsborg; Lane University, at Leocompton; Friends' University, at Wichita; Southwest Kansas College, at Winfield; Washburn College, at Topeka; Kansas Wesleyan University, at Salina; and the Ottawa University, at Ottawa. Normal instruction is given at the state normal school at Emporia, at the state university, at the Kansas Normal College at Fort Scott, at the Central Normal College at Great Bend, and at other institutions. There is an institution for deaf-mutes at Olathe, one for the blind at Kansas City, a state insane asylum at Osawatomie, and a state penitentiary near Leavenworth.

Railroads have received a large development in Kansas. In 1864 there were 40 miles of railroad; in 1870, 1501 miles; in 1884, 4227 miles; and in 1900, about 9000.

The Counties are 105 in number, named as follows: Allen, Anderson, Atchison, Barber, Barton, Bourbon, Brown, Butler, Chase, Chautauqua, Cherokee, Cheyenne, Clark, Clay, Cloud, Coffey, Comanche, Cowley, Crawford, Decatur, Dickinson, Doniphan, Douglas, Edwards, Elk, Ellis, Ellsworth, Finney, Ford, Franklin, Geary, Gove, Graham, Grant, Gray, Greeley, Greenwood, Hamilton, Harper, Harvey, Haskell, Hodgeman, Jackson, Jefferson, Jewell, Johnson, Kearney, Kingman, Kiowa, Labette, Lane, Leavenworth, Lincoln, Linn, Logan, Lyon, McPherson, Marion, Marshall, Meade, Miami, Mitchell, Montgomery, Morris, Morton, Nemaha, Neosho, Ness, Norton, Osage, Osborne, Ottawa, Pawnee, Phillips, Pottawatomie, Pratt, Rawlins, Reno, Republic, Rice, Riley, Rooks, Rush, Russell, Saline, Scott, Sedgwick, Seward, Shawnee, Sheridan, Sherman, Smith, Stafford, Stanton, Stevens, Sumner, Thomas, Trego, Wabaunsee, Wallace, Washington, Wichita, Wilson, Woodson, and Wyandotte.

Cities and Towns.—Of these the principal are Kansas City, opposite Kansas City, Mo. (pop. in 1900, 51,418); Topeka, the capital (33,608); Wichita, at the junction of the Arkansas and Little Arkansas rivers (24,671); Leavenworth (20,736); Atchison (15,722); Lawrence (10,862); Fort Scott (10,322), etc.

The Constitution of Kansas went into effect in 1861. The governor is chosen for the term of two years, as are also the other executive officers. The legislature consists of a Senate and a House of Representatives. The members of the former are elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The state sends 8 representatives to the lower house of Congress.

History.—Coronado's exploring party of Spaniards visited this region in 1541, crossing the country from S. to N.; and in 1719 a party of French traversed it. The Louisiana purchase of 1803 made the greater part of it a portion of the United States domain; but a portion of southwestern Kansas was Mexican territory and afterwards part of Texas until 1850. Through the opening of the "Santa Fé Trail" an important overland trade passed through the region. Kansas was included successively in Louisiana and Missouri territories. In 1854 it was organized as a territory, the slavery-restriction clause of the Missouri Compromise of 1820 being repealed by Congress. For some years Kansas was a battle-ground of the party in favor of the extension of slavery and of those who opposed it, the latter finally triumphing. In 1861 the state was admitted into the Union.

Pop. in 1855, 8601; in 1860, 107,206; in 1870, 364,399; in 1880, 996,096; in 1890, 1,427,096; in 1900, 1,470,495 (foreign-born, 126,685).

Kansas, a post-village of Walker co., Ala. The banking point is Jasper. Pop. about 100.

Kansas, a banking post-village of Edgar co., Ill., 13 miles WSW. of Paris, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis and the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton R. It has a canning-factory, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1049.

Kansas, a post-village of Seneca co., Ohio, 12 miles by rail SW. of Fremont. Pop. about 350.

Kansas City, the largest city of Kansas, capital of Wyandotte co., created in 1886 by the consolidation of the then village of Kansas City with the towns of Wyandotte, Armourdale, and Armstrong under its present name, is situated at the junction of the Kansas and Missouri rivers, adjacent to Kansas City, Mo. (from which it is nominally separated by the state line). It is on the Missouri Pacific and the Union Pacific R. This city is noted as the seat of immense stock and meat-packing interests, its yards and packing-houses being second only to those of Chicago in the volume of business done. Several million head of stock are handled here yearly, and the value of the "packed" product exceeds $50,000,000. The city has also a very extensive grain and flour trade, with vast grain-elevators, railroad- and machine-shops, manufacturing of soap, fertilizers, engines, locomotives, etc. It is the seat of Kansas City University and of a state institution for the blind. Numerous bridges span the Kansas River within the corporate limits of the city. Pop. in 1880, 3200; in 1890, 38,316; in 1900, 51,418.

Kansas City, a city of Missouri, the second in population and importance, is in Jackson co., on the right or S. bank of the Missouri River,  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile below the mouth of the Kansas River. Lat.  $39^{\circ} 8' N.$ ; lon.  $94^{\circ} 37' W.$  It is an important railroad-centre and situated 235 miles (direct) W. by N. of St. Louis. Among the railroads centring here are the Missouri Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Wabash, etc. Several fine bridges cross the Missouri at this point. The city is mostly built on the top and sides of a steep hill, the site having been originally very rough and uneven. Among the most prominent buildings are the city-hall, court-house, art-museum, Board of Trade, and custom-house. The city has various higher educational institutions (Kansas City School of Law, University Medical College, Scarritt Training School), opera-house, theatres, etc., and is adorned with three fine parks,—Troost, Fairmount, and Washington. Elevation, 730 feet. The centre of a region of extraordinary agricultural resources and abounding in coal, lead, iron, etc., it has become an important commercial city, doing a very large business in live-stock and grain and in manufacturing railroad-iron, furniture, agricultural implements, paints, linseed oil, car-wheels, flour, etc. In its vast slaughtering and packing-industries it is closely associated with the adjoining Kansas City in Kansas. Pop. in 1860, 4418; in 1870, 32,260; in 1880, 55,785; in 1890, 132,716; in 1900, 163,752.

Kansas (or Kaw) River is formed by two large branches, the Smoky Hill Fork and the Solomon River, which, after traversing the great treeless plains of western Kansas, unite about 10 miles W. of Abilene. It runs north-eastward through Geary and Riley cos. to Manhattan, where the Big Blue River enters it from the N. Below Manhattan it flows generally eastward and enters the Missouri River at the W. boundary of the state of Missouri, within the limits of Kansas City, Kan. It is nearly 300 miles long, or, if we include the Smoky Hill Fork, about 900 miles. Its largest tributaries are the Republican and Big Blue ivers, which enter it from the left. The chief towns on its banks are Lawrence, Topeka, and Junction City. It traverses fertile prairies, in which bituminous coal abounds. It is not a very important river for navigation.

Kansasville, kan'sas-vil, a post-village of Racine co., Wis., 18 miles by rail W. of Racine. Pop. 75.

Kansk, kánsk, a town of Asiatic Russia, government of Yeniseisk, on the Kana, 250 miles SE. of Yeniseisk, on the Siberian railway. Pop. in 1897, 7507.

Kan-su, kán'soo', the northwesternmost province of China, having on the east the province of Shen-si, on the south Se-chuen, and on other sides Mongolia, into which stretches a long tongue of land N. of the territory of the Koko-nor. Surface mountainous, with the lofty Nan-shan mountains occupying a part of its southern border. Principal river, the Hoang-ho. The products comprise dyes, gold, mercury, silks, musk, and tobacco. Lanchow is the capital. The population of the province is estimated to be over 10,000,000.

Kantavu, one of the Fiji Islands. See KANDABU.

Kanth, kánt, a town of Prussia, in Silesia, on the Weis- tritz, 13 miles SW. of Breslau. Pop. about 3000.

Kantner, a post-village of Somerset co., Pa., on the Baltimore and Ohio R. The banking point is Somerset. Pop. 150.

Kanturk', a town of Ireland, co. of Cork, 13 miles W. by N. of Mallow. Pop. about 3000.

Kashmir, or Cashmere, kash-meer', a country of northern India, in the trans-Himalayan tract. It comprises, in addition to Kashmir proper, Bultistan (or Little Tibet), Ladakh (or Western Tibet), Gilgit, Punch, and Jammu. The sovereign, who is a vassal of the British, is called the "Maharajah of Jammu and Kashmir." Total area, 80,900 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 2,908,578. The region is watered by the Indus and Shyok rivers, and is traversed in the NE. by the Karakorum mountains, which have the lofty summits of Peak K<sup>1</sup> or Godwin-Austen (also known as Dapsang), 28,278 feet (probably the highest mountain in the world after Mount Everest); K<sup>1</sup> or Masherbrum, 25,676 ft.; K<sup>2</sup>, 25,119 ft.; K<sup>3</sup>, 22,764 ft.; and K<sup>4</sup>, 23,906 ft. It belongs to the basin of the Indus, which traverses it from SE. to NW., flowing through Ladakh, Bultistan, and Gilgit. The river Jhelum, which rises in Kashmir, forms for a considerable distance the W. boundary, on the side of the Punjab. Kashmir proper (or the Vale of Kashmir), with its surrounding mountains, consists mainly of an extensive valley of an irregular oval form, extending NW. and SE., from 5500 to 6000 feet above the sea, and surrounded on all sides by lofty mountains, secondary ranges of the Himalayas. The alluvial plain in the bottom of the valley, seemingly the remains of a former sea, is about 90 miles long and 35 miles in greatest width. The mountain-ranges which enclose the valley are, on the N., the Durawur and Kuhama mountains; NE., the Haramuk (16,900 ft.) and Sonamurg mountains; E., the mowry Panjal; S., the Futi Panjal and Panjal of Banihal; and W., the Pir Panjal (15,500 ft.). Many of the summits are covered with perpetual snow. The valley is entered by passes, which are practicable for horses, but none of them for wheeled carriages. The most important are the Baramula and Punch, on the W. frontier, Banihal, on the S., and Nabog, on the E., all practicable at all seasons of the year; and the pass of the Pir Panjal, passable in summer, 10,690 ft. The Jhelum flows NW. through the centre of the valley, receiving numerous streams from both sides and expanding into the shallow Wular Lake. The whole of the valley is admirably supplied with the means of irrigation. The Vale of Kashmir has long been famous for its delightful climate and fruitfulness. All the grains are cultivated and yield bountiful crops. Among the natural productions is the Singhara (or water-nut), the seed of Trapa bispinosa, on which many of the poorer inhabitants largely subsist. The principal fruits are apples, pears, plums, cherries, apricots, etc. Among the trees of Kashmir are the deodar (or Himalayan cedar), the ebunar (Platanus orientalis), poplar, chestnut, lime, maple, willow, and, on the mountains, birch, alder, and pine. Flowers, especially roses, grow in vast profusion. The mineral resources of Kashmir include iron, lead, copper, and plumbago.

Kashmir has long been celebrated for its shawls, the industry in which, however, has very greatly declined in late years. The wool used in their manufacture is of two kinds, one obtained from the tame goat and the other from the wild goat, wild sheep, and other wild animals. Paper, saddlery, and arms are also manufactured, all of superior quality. The attire of roses made in the Vale of Kashmir is in high repute. The country exports large quantities of butter.

The Kashmirians, who constitute the bulk of the inhabitants of Kashmir, represent physically a splendid type of the Hindu. About two-thirds of the population are Mohammedans. Nine-tenths of the remainder are adherents of Hinduism. In 1586, Kashmir was subjugated by Akbar and was incorporated in the Mogul Empire. The Afghans conquered it in 1752, and held it until 1819, when it was conquered by the Sikhs of the Punjab. Since 1846 it has been under the protection of the British. Ken'tuck', a post-hamlet of Talladega co., Ala.

Kentuck, a post-hamlet of Jackson co., W. Va.

Kentucky, a south-central state of the American Union, in the Mississippi Valley, bounded N. by Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, E. by West Virginia and Virginia, S. by Tennessee, and W. by Missouri and Illinois. The Ohio River separates it from the states on the N.; its E. boundary-line follows the Big Sandy River and its Tug Fork to the crest of the Cumberland Mountains, which form the SE. limit of the state; the S. boundary, to the E. of the Tennessee River, is approximately the parallel of 36° 38' N., and thence westward follows that of 36° 30' N.; and the Mississippi River marks the W. limit. Area, 40,400 sq. m., of which 400 belong to the water-surfaces.

Face of the Country.—The E. and SE. sections of Kentucky are traversed by numerous parallel and often precipitous NE. and SW. ranges of the Alleghany system, with deep and narrow intervening valleys, the mountains not exceeding 3000 feet in extreme height and often crowned by narrow table-lands. Here are forests of beech, cedar, hemlock, laurel and holly, and many other trees; and the whole region abounds in picturesque scenery. Westward, in east-central Kentucky, is the beautiful and exceedingly fertile "blue-grass region," with a soil based upon blue limestone and famous for its immense stock-breeding and grazing interests. A portion of this tract is skirted by regions known as "barrens," which are, however, by no means barren, as a rule. Westward there is a large tract which was open prairie within the memory of living men, but is now well wooded. In the extreme W. there are bluffs and fertile river-bottoms, which in the SW. decline into cypress-swamps, with large shallow lakes.

Rivers.—Several affluents, large and small, of the Ohio are adapted to steamboat navigation. The Tennessee and Cumberland rivers are important channels of commerce. The Kentucky, Green, Licking, and Big Sandy admit of considerable navigation; and this has been largely extended by means of slackwater improvements, such as locks, dams, and short canals. The extent of the navigable waters of Kentucky is placed at upward of 3000 miles.

Geology.—The Lower Silurian limestone and other Subcarboniferous strata extend southward from Cincinnati in a wide strip, completely dividing the extensive coal-bearing fields of the E. and W. from each other. This tract is girt about by a wide belt of Subcarboniferous or cavernous limestone, which supports noble forests and excellent farms, as well as wide "barrens." The mountain-region of eastern Kentucky abounds in beds of bituminous, block, and cannel coals and is plentifully supplied with excellent iron-ores. It is also finely timbered and has an abundance of salt-licks and springs, and petroleum is obtained at various points. The area of the eastern coal-field is put at 10,000 sq. m. The western coal-field has an area of 4000 sq. m., bordering upon Illinois and Indiana, and containing both block and cannel coals. The quantity of coal mined in the state in 1899, representing the product of 97 mines, was 4,607,255 (short) tons, valued at $3,618,222; in 1901 the output was 5,469,986 tons; in 1903, 4,379,060 tons. In the abundance and richness of its iron-ores, Kentucky holds an important position. This source of wealth, however, has hitherto been but little exploited. The product of the iron-mines in 1903 amounted to 23,327 long tons of red hematite and 8900 tons of brown hematite (total value, $46,547). Epsom and other cathartic salts are manufactured to some extent from the natural mineral waters, and nitre has been obtained from the cavern-carths. The SW. part of the state is of the Cretaceous and Tertiary formations.

Climate.—The climate of the state is salubrious and not marked by accentuated extremes of temperature. The summer heat rises to about 100°, while the cold of winter descends but rarely to zero. The average January temperature is about 35° and the July temperature 78°. Over almost the entire state there is a generous rainfall, which averages for the year about 40 inches.

Agricultural Resources.—Kentucky has a high reputation as a stock-raising state. Its splendid herds of short-horn cattle and excellent thoroughbred horses have a world-wide fame. Not less important is the breeding of mules, of which many thousands are yearly exported, largely to the Gulf states, and of swine, chiefly marketed at Louisville and Cincinnati. The blue grass furnishes pasture throughout the year. The wool product is large and of excellent quality. Wheat of high excellence is a leading crop. Indian-corn, hemp, and tobacco are productions for which the climate is especially adapted. The leading agricultural crops were, in 1900: corn, 69,267,224 bushels; wheat, 12,442,846 bushels; oats, 9,304,293 bushels; rye, 294,593 bushels; potatoes, 2,807,490 bushels; and hay, 390,064 tons. The annual yield of tobacco is from one-third to one-half of that of the entire United States. In 1900 there were upward of 380,000 acres under cultivation with this product. The washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 2,701,876 pounds.

Industries.—The leading industry of the state is the manufacture of tobacco, the product of which in 1900 was valued at $21,922,111. In 1899 there were in the state 543 manufacturing of cigars and tobacco, the combined product from which was 54,323,245 cigars and 40,032,452 pounds of plug, fine-cut, and smoking tobacco. The manufacture of iron and steel and meat-packing are among the leading industries of the state. Whiskey is a leading product of the central belt. In 1900 the value of the produced alcoholic and malted liquors was $12,973,154. Cooperage, glass-blowing, flour- and lumber-milling, and the production of woolen and cotton goods, rope, bagging, furniture, carriages, and machinery, all employ considerable capital. The lumber- and timber-products of the state were in 1900 valued at $13,774,911. Salt is largely made by evaporation or boiling from the natural saline waters.

Railroads.—This state early developed a splendid system of macadamised roads, which, with her navigable streams, for many years gave her a preëminence in point of internal communication. In 1841 it had 28 miles of railroad; in 1848, 28 miles; in 1860, 534 miles; in 1870, 1017 miles; in 1890, 2946 miles; in 1900, 3127 miles.

Education.—In 1798 the Transylvania University (now Kentucky University) was founded at Lexington, and other colleges and academies soon followed. With Kentucky University are affiliated the state agricultural college (also at Lexington) and several professional schools. Among the collegiate institutions are the Central University at Richmond, the Berea College, and numerous denominational academies and seminaries at Georgetown, Louisville, Maysville, etc. There are special schools of theology, law, medicine, pharmacy, and military science. There are state and other normal schools at Corinth, Bowling Green, Madisonville and elsewhere, and for colored, at Frankfort. There is a state institution for deaf-mutes at Danville, for the blind at Louisville, for the feeble-minded at Frankfort, state insane hospitals at Lexington, Hopkinsville, and Anchorage, state penitentiaries at Frankfort and Eddyville.

Objects of Interest to Tourists.—Among these we notice first the MAMMOTH CAVE (which see) and the other numerous caves and sinks of the state; the salt-licks; the beautiful park-like forests of the blue-grass country; Reelfoot Lake, in the SW.; and the numerous mounds, rock houses, and fortifications built by some aboriginal people.

Counties.—Kentucky in 1900 was divided into 119 counties: Adair, Allen, Anderson, Ballard, Barren, Bath, Bell, Boone, Bourbon, Boyd, Boyle, Bracken, Breathitt, Breckinridge, Bullitt, Butler, Caldwell, Calloway, Campbell, Carlisle, Carroll, Carter, Casey, Christian, Clark, Clay, Clinton, Crittenden, Cumberland, Daviess, Edmondson, Elliott, Estill, Fayette, Fleming, Floyd, Franklin, Fulton, Gallatin, Garrard, Grant, Graves, Grayson, Green, Greenup, Hancock, Hardin, Harlan, Harrison, Hart, Henderson, Henry, Hickman, Hopkins, Jackson, Jefferson, Jessamine, Johnson, Kenton, Knott, Knox, Laclede, Laramie, Laurel, Lawrence, Lee, Leslie, Letcher, Lewis, Lincoln, Livingston, Logan, Lyon, Madison, Magoffin, Marion, Marshall, Martin, Mason, Meade, Mercer, Mesquite, Meigs, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Muhlenburg, Nelson, Nicholas, Ohio, Oldham, Owen, Owensley, Pendleton, Perry, Pike, Powell, Pulaski, Robertson, Rockcastle, Rowan, Russell, Scott, Shelby, Simpson, Spencer, Taylor, Todd, Trigg, Trimble, Union, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Webster, Whitley, Wolfe, and Woodford.

Cities and Towns.—Of these the principal are Louisville, at the falls of the Ohio, the commercial metropolis of the state (pop. in 1900, 204,731); Covington (42,938) and Newport (23,301), manufacturing cities on the Ohio, opposite Cincinnati; Lexington, the emporium of the blue-grass country (26,369); Paducah, on the lower Ohio (19,446); Owensboro (13,189) and Henderson (10,272), both large tobacco markets on the Ohio; Frankfort, the state capital (9487); and Bowling Green (8226).

Government, History.—The governor and other executive officers are chosen for the term of 4 years. The legislature consists of a Senate, whose members are elected for 4 years, and a House of Representatives, elected for 2 years. The state sends 11 representatives to the lower house of Congress.

In 1769 Daniel Boone established himself in this region, which was claimed by Virginia, and was followed by numerous hardy adventurers from Virginia and North Carolina. The first permanent settlement was made at Harrodsburg in 1774. In 1775 the settlers organized a local government and gave their new country the name of Transylvania; but in 1776 Virginia declared the whole region a county, and afterwards a district, of her own. After a long dispute as to the terms of separation, the people were finally permitted to set up an independent government, and in 1792 Kentucky was received into the Union as a state with its present limits. Kentucky being a slave state, many of her people sympathized with the South during the war of 1861-65; but the Union party, sustained by the presence of Federal troops, was strong enough to prevent the secession of the state, which was the arena of several active campaigns.

Population.—In 1790 the population was 73,677; in 1800, 220,955; in 1810, 406,511; in 1820, 584,135; in 1830, 687,917; in 1840, 779,828; in 1850, 982,405; in 1860, 1,155,684; in 1870, 1,321,011; in 1880, 1,648,690; in 1890, 1,858,635; in 1900, 2,147,174. The negro population in 1900 was 284,706 and the foreign-born 50,249.

Kentucky River is formed by the North, South, and Middle Forks, which rise in the Cumberland Mountains and unite at Proctor, Ky. It runs generally northwestward, with many abrupt deviations from a direct course, and enters the Ohio River at Carrollton. Its length is about 250 miles. Steamboats ascend it to Frankfort, the capital of the state. Near this place the river runs in a deep chasm between perpendicular walls of limestone. It traverses a beautiful and fertile country.

Kiev, a fortified city of European Russia, capital of the government of Kiev, on the right bank of the Dnieper, 670 miles S. of St. Petersburg, 490 miles SW. of Moscow, and 290 miles by rail N. of Odessa. Lat. of observatory, 50° 27' 11" N.; lon. 30° 30' 11" E. Its venerable churches and monasteries, its relics of saints, and the part which it played as the cradle of Christianity in Russia, render it a holy city in the eyes of the Russians. It is picturesquely situated on and between considerable elevations, having at places steep acclivities, and, with its many gilded cupolas and its towers, presents a striking appearance. It consists of three main quarters: Old Kiev; Podol, the old commercial quarter, to the N., occupying level ground, subject to inundation; and the Petchersk, crowning an eminence in the extreme SE. There are, besides, a number of suburban sections, the most aristocratic quarter being Lipki, W. of the Petchersk. In the Petchersk, or "city of caves," is the famous old monastery called the Petcherskaya Lavra, the most venerated in Russia. It is surrounded by a high wall, and with its churches, chapels, cells of the monks, and various structures, constitutes a little town in itself. Here is a labyrinth of caves, excavated in the rock, containing the remains of saints, which attract vast numbers of pilgrims. In Old Kiev are the cathedral of Saint Sophia, dating from the eleventh century, the splendid modern cathedral of Saint Vladimir, and the churches of Saint Andrew and of the Three Saints. There are other noteworthy ecclesiastical structures. The principal work of sculpture is the Vladimir monument. Kiev is the seat of the University of Saint Vladimir, which has over 2500 students. It pos-sees a theological academy, a polytechnic institute, a museum of ecclesiastical antiquities, a gallery of paintings, and a large botanical garden. The city has an extensive trade, an exchange, a number of banks, and many manufacturing establishments. It is a great centre of the beet-sugar industry and its preserved fruits are in high repute. The Dnieper is crossed by two great iron bridges. There is an electric railway. The city is the seat of a metropolitan. Until a few years ago it was a fortress. Pop. in 1850, about 50,000; in 1902, 249,830. Kiev is called the "mother of Russian cities." Soon after the foundation of the Russian monarchy (second half of the ninth century) it became the capital, and for some time after the division of the realm (middle of the eleventh century) it remained the chief centre of power.

This region includes the Russian governments of Turgai, Uralak, Syr-Darya, and Tomak in Asia, and that of Orenburg in Europe, embracing a large part of the steppes eastward of the Volga as far as the E. end of Lake Balkash. The surface of the country (the more northerly parts of which are known geographically as the Kirghiz Steppe) is traversed by many mountain-chains, but it chiefly consists of barren plains abounding in salt lakes. The inhabitants are nomadic, their principal occupation being the rearing of sheep, goats, horses, and camels. Some land on river-banks, however, is tilled for millet, rye, and barley. The Kirghis proper, who call themselves Kasaks, whence they are known as Kirghis-Kasaks (Kasak-Kirghis), have pronounced Mongolian affinities. They are divided into the so-named Great, Little, and Middle hordes. Their religion is a compound of Islamism and idolatry. The subjection of the Kirghis-Kasaks to the empire of Russia was effected in the latter part of the eighteenth century and the early part of the nineteenth, and they are now active allies of the Russians. They number about 2,500,000. Linguistically related to the Kirghis proper, but inimical to them, are the Kara-Kirghis, or "Black Kirghis," who inhabit the mountainous tracts of the eastern part of Russian Turkestan (basin of the Isik-Kul and the country to the W.) and who also dwell in Chinese territory (Eastern Turkestan).

Population estimated at from 8,000,000 to 15,000,000. The number of inhabitants liable to taxation was officially given in 1900 as 5,608,151.

The peninsula is traversed through its length by a mountain-range (known in its northern and southern parts as the Ham-gyong-Do and the Kang-wong-Do respectively), abrupt and precipitous on the E., but forming a gentle slope on the W. side, which, being watered by the principal rivers of the country (none of which is important), is exceedingly fertile. The Pai-shan (Paik-tu-san or Peh-tan-shen) or "White Mountain," in the N., is an extinct volcano, and rises to 8900 feet. The coasts are for the most part rocky and almost inaccessible; yet there are some excellent harbors. The climate is on the whole salubrious, cold in winter and hot in summer, the range of temperature being from near zero to about 90°-95°. The average annual rainfall is about 36 inches, the precipitation, however, being subject to great fluctuations. In the N. the grains that can be grown with advantage are barley and oats; but in the S. the soil is fertile, and wheat, cotton, rice, millet, beans, tobacco, and hemp are grown extensively. The ginseng root is a product of Korea, greatly valued in China and Japan. The uncultivated northern parts of the kingdom are covered with extensive forests of pine, fir, oak, maple, birch, ash, etc. Fruits are abundant, including the pear, plum, strawberry, melon, blackberry, apricot, and grape; but, on account of the continual summer rains, all are insipid. Gold, silver, copper, rock-salt, iron, and coal are found, but were not wrought to any extent until recent years. Gold-mining concessions are now held by Americans (at Wönsan), Russians (at Ham-heung), Germans (Teng Ko Koi), Japanese (S. of Seoul), French and English (Unsan). The quantity of gold exported in 1900 was 4,101,260 yen, or about $2,043,000. The principal coal-mines are at Ping-yang. The domestic animals are oxen, pigs, goats, dogs, and cats, and a small race of horses, very strong and spirited. Oxen almost alone are used for agricultural labors. Sheep are almost unknown, owing to the prohibition against rearing them. The royal tiger and panther were until recently very numerous, and their hides formed an important article of commerce. Korean musk is much used as a medicine and perfume.

The manufactures of Korea have greatly declined. They comprise strong and coarse tissues of hemp, cotton, silk, and grass; mats, bamboo screens, inlaid wares, and especially paper, out of which are made hats, umbrellas, doors, sacks, and cloaks. A match-factory was established in Seoul in 1901.

The foreign commerce is still mainly with China and Japan; but the trade with European countries and the United States has been increasing materially as the result of the commercial treaties which followed rapidly upon that of 1882 with the United States. Seoul (Seoul) and the ports of Chemulpo, Fusan, Wönsan (Gensan), Chinnampo, Mokpo, Kunsan, Masampo, and Songhehin are now open to foreign trade and commerce; and this condition is considered to be semi-officially so for the inland city of Ping-yang, whose extensive coal-fields are operated chiefly by the Japanese. The chief articles of export are rice (4,274,500 yen in 1900), beans, cow-hides, ginseng, gold, and copper. The development of internal commerce is greatly retarded by the primitive methods of communication. Transport is by porters, oxen, and pack-horses. The lines of railroad are still extremely limited; a railway connects Chemulpo with Seoul, and other roads, originated by the exigencies of the Russo-Japanese war, are now (1905) in course of construction. There were, in 1900, 2170 miles of telegraph in operation.

Korea is governed by an emperor (title assumed in 1897), whose sway, in a measure absolute, is modified by a cabinet and council of ministers, the central government consisting of 10 departments,—those of the cabinet, home office, foreign office, treasury, war office, education, justice, agriculture (trade and industry), household, and police. The empire is divided for administrative purposes into 13 to or provinces, and these again subdivided into 339 kün or districts. The mass of the common people are either believers in Buddhism (which prevails in a degraded form) or else sunk in spirit-worship coupled with all kinds of superstitions. Confucius, much esteemed, has many followers among the higher classes, on whom ancestor-worship has a strong hold. Korean life presents in a great measure the characteristics of life in China. There is a noble or privileged class. The women live in seclusion. There are many thousand Christians, mainly Catholics. The Koreans are a Mongolian people. Their language is of the agglutinative type, very different from the Chinese, and is written with individual alphabetic characters. Chinese is employed in official documents and business correspondence, and has become the literary language of the country. Korean literature, which is not important, is modelled mainly upon that of China.

In the Middle Ages Korea was a flourishing state under the Wang dynasty. Eventually it was compelled to place itself under the suzerainty of China, to whose ruler an annual tribute was paid. The western world possessed no knowledge of the country before the middle of the seventeenth century. Until recently the Koreans shut themselves off from foreign nations. In 1877-81 the principal ports were opened to the Japanese. The United States made a commercial treaty in 1882, and other leading foreign powers in 1883, 1884, 1886, 1892, 1899, 1901, and 1902. China continued to claim full suzerainty until 1894-1895, when, by the treaty of Shimonoseki (May, 1895), closing the disastrous war with Japan, this suzerainty was renounced and Japanese influence introduced. Korea was to some extent the theatre of military operations at the beginning of the Russo-Japanese war, which brought the country virtually under the control of Japan. The capital is Seoul, which in 1902 had a population of 198,646. The foreign population of the country comprised in 1902 about 19,000 Japanese, 5000 Chinese, 275 Americans, 140 British, 30 Russians, etc.

Area, about 500,000 sq. m. Blanc Sablon, near the mouth of the North-West River, is the E. boundary of that portion of the peninsula which belongs to the province of Quebec, or the area which drains into the river and gulf of St. Lawrence. The portion belonging to Newfoundland is that which is drained by rivers flowing into the Atlantic Ocean. The remaining area, draining into Hudson Bay, is frequently called East Main, and forms the unorganized territory of Ungava.

The interior of Labrador is still imperfectly known, but it consists in great part of an elevated and glaciated plateau, of from 1800 to 2000 feet elevation, bordered on the coast by mountains of 3000-5000 ft. in altitude, and reaching in a few places 8000 ft. (between Nachvak and Cape Chudleigh). The surface of this plateau, whose area is thought to exceed 200,000 sq. m., and on which is found the water-parting for the different streams, is largely base-rock and contains numerous marshes and lakes. The coast is deeply indented with fjords, the largest on the Atlantic side being Hamilton Inlet. On the N. is the large and open Ungava Bay. The Hudson Bay shore is mainly low, although rising between Cape Jones and Portland Promontory to 2000 ft.

The principal rivers are the East Main (or Stude), which flows W. into the SE. extremity of James Bay; the Big River, and the Great and Little White rivers, which flow westward into Hudson Bay; the Koksoak, which falls into Ungava Bay; the Grand (or Hamilton), which joins the Atlantic Ocean in Hamilton Inlet; and the Manicouagan, which flows southward into the St. Lawrence. The largest of the numerous lakes is Mistassini. The magnificent Grand Falls, on the Grand (or Hamilton) River, are among the most imposing water-falls of the world.

The prevailing rocks on the coast are granite, gneiss, and mica-slate. Above these, in some parts, is a massive bed of red sandstone, followed by limestone. The Archæan or Azoic rocks seem to constitute the great mass of the interior plateau. In the valleys, where the soil is sandy and the temperature considerably above the average, juniper, birch, and poplar trees are found growing, and form a covert during the summer for deer, bears, wolves, foxes, martens, otters, etc., till the approach of winter drives them to the coast.

The climate is too severe to ripen any of the ordinary cereals. Barley makes excellent fodder; potatoes and several species of culinary vegetables do well. The whole of this vast wilderness is uninhabited by civilized man, with the exception of a few settlements on the St. Lawrence and Atlantic coasts and some widely-separated trading and mission posts. Wandering tribes of Eskimos occupy the N. and E. coasts of Labrador, while Naskapee, Mistassini, and Montagnais Indians are thinly scattered over the interior. The exports, which are chiefly through Newfoundland, are codfish, salmon, seal and whale oil, and furs. Once the country was rich in fur-bearing animals and caribou or reindeer, but these are now greatly reduced in numbers.

The Indians who inhabit the interior of Labrador are all of the Algonquin race. Nearly all of them profess the Roman Catholic faith. They bring down furs to the coast and exchange them for ammunition and clothing. The Eskimos extend southward to Hamilton Inlet, those S. of Hopedale being of mixed blood. They number about 1000 on the Atlantic coast. They are mild and hospitable. During the brief Labrador summer the whole coast, for 500 miles N. of the Strait of Belle Isle, swarms with fishermen from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Quebec, and the United States, engaged in the capture and cure of seal, cod, salmon, salmon-trout, and herring.

The chief European settlements on the E. coast consist of Battle Harbor and Rigolet, and the Moravian stations Nain, Okkak, Hopedale, Hebron, Zoar, Makkowik, and Ramah. The Hudson Bay Company has several settlements in Labrador, and receives valuable furs from it. The total population is thought not to exceed 10,000.

Labrador was probably visited by the Norsemen about the beginning of the eleventh century. The Portuguese navigator Cortereal landed on the coast about 1500. The name "Labrador" was given to the region because it was thought that the natives would make excellent laborers or, in other words, slaves.

Lapland (native, Sameanda, sá-me-án-dá; Sw. Lappmark, lápp'mark; Russ. Laplándiya, láp-lán'-de-yá'), an extensive territory, with no precise limitations, in the N. part of Europe, between about lat. 65° and 71° N., reaching from the shores of Norway E. to the White Sea. Area, about 150,000 sq. m., of which more than one-half, situated E. of the Torneá and its tributary, the Muonio, belongs to Russia, while the remainder is shared between Sweden and Norway. Lapland is, accordingly, not the name of any political division. The Norwegian portion is included in the amt of Finnmarken, the Swedish portion in the läns of Norrbotten and Westerbotten, and the Russian portion is partly in Finland and partly in the peninsula of Kola. Both from geographical position and from physical conformation, Lapland is one of the most forbidding regions of the globe, consisting either of rugged mountains, some of them covered with perpetual snow, or of vast monotonous tracts of moorland wastes. The highest summit of Sweden, the Kebnekaise (7015 feet), lies in this region.

Swedish Lapland has recently risen to economic importance through the exploitation of iron deposits at Gällivare, a short distance N. of the Arctic Circle, which are among the richest in the world, and which have been made accessible by rail both from the Gulf of Bothnia and from the Norwegian coast. This extensive territory appears to have been at one time wholly occupied by the people to whom it owes its name; but its southern and better portions have been gradually encroached upon by Norwegians, Swedes, and Finns, till the Laplanders (Lapps) proper have in a great measure been pressed beyond the Arctic Circle. There they retain their distinctive features and ancient customs and follow their favorite modes of life, either as "mountain" Laplanders, leading a nomadic life and pasturing large reindeer herds, or as "shore" Laplanders, who dwell upon the coast and subsist chiefly by fishing. The total population of the region has been estimated to be about 160,000, of which not more than 25,000-30,000 are true or full-blooded Lapps. The Lapps speak a language allied to that of the Finns; but between the two nations there is a traditional dislike, the result of ages of hostility. The chief characteristics of the Lapps are: low stature, seldom exceeding 4 feet 9 inches in height; great muscular power; a large head; dark, long, and glossy hair; small brown eyes, obliquely placed; wide mouth, with ill-defined lips; a scanty beard; and a skin of a yellow, dingy hue. The Laplanders are not deficient either in intellectual or in moral capacity. They are simple-hearted, hospitable, and inclined to practise the duties of Christianity, which they all profess, under the form of Lutheranism in Norway and Sweden, and that of the Greek Church in Russia.

Lapland, a post-hamlet of Greenwood co., Kan., 33 miles S. by W. of Emporia.

La Plata, Rio de, reo'dá lá-plá'tá, or the Plate River, a great estuary of South America, formed by the junction of the Paraná and Uruguay rivers, in lat. 34° S., and draining through its numerous tributaries a great part of the Argentine Republic, the whole of Paraguay, most of Uruguay, with considerable portions of Bolivia and Brazil. The estuary resulting from this union is 190 miles in length from NW. to SE., and where it joins the Atlantic Ocean, between Maldonado and Cape San Antonio, is 135 miles across. Its muddy waters can be traced in the ocean 100 miles from its mouth. The total length of the La Plata, with its longest arm (the Paraná), has been estimated at nearly 2300 miles; and from the ocean to the island of Apípe, in the Paraná, at least 1250 miles, there is a continuous safe navigation. The Aguapehí, an affluent of the Paragay (which is in itself a tributary of the Paraná), in the state of Matto Grosso, Brazil, near lat. 15° 40' S., lon. 59° 20' W., is separated only by a very narrow portage from the Alegre, a tributary of the Guaporé, and a canal made to connect the two streams has been cut. By this canal direct communication is made between the Amazon and La Plata systems of waters. During flood water it is estimated that 2,000,000 cubic feet are passed out of the estuary per second. The estuary is rapidly silting, the mean depth at Montevideo being now only 15 feet. Of the various estuarine channels the Paraná Guard is alone available for large ocean vessels. Area of drainage basin, about 1,200,000 sq. m.

Lebanon, lēb'ə-non (a Semitic name meaning "the white"; L. Libanus), a mountain-chain of Syria, extending parallel with the coast of the Mediterranean, at a short distance from the sea, to which spurs project. It stretches for a distance of about 100 miles from the river Litany (Leontes), which empties into the sea near Tyre, northward to the Nahr el-Kebir, in the vicinity of Tripoli and Homa. It is one of two parallel ranges, the other, to the E., being known as the Anti-Lebanon or Anti-Libanus. Between the two is the narrow, fertile valley called El-Buka's, the ancient Coele-Syria. The Lebanon rises in the peaks Dhor el-Khodib and Jebel-Makmal to a height of a little more than 10,000 feet, being somewhat higher than the Anti-Libanus. The general elevation of the crest is between 6000 and 7000 ft. above the sea; the valley of El-Buka's is elevated about 1500 ft. The Lebanon presents mainly a formation of limestone, whose whiteness has given the range its name. The mountains are deeply cleft with ravines and chasms and the upper parts are bare and desolate. The eastern slope, which is more abrupt than the western, is almost barren. There are, however, many fruitful and well-watered valleys, nearly all on the western side, and in numerous places the slopes are terraced and brought into a high state of cultivation. Immense plantations of mulberry-trees, olive groves, fig and other orchards, vineyards, and patches of grain attest the untiring industry of the sturdy mountain folk. Hundreds of little villages are perched on the steep declivities. The forests of cedars that in ancient times were such a source of riches in the Lebanon are now represented by a few hundred trees. Two rivers flow in opposite directions through the valley of El-Buka's, the Nahr el-Asi (the ancient Orontes) towards the N. and the Litany towards the S. Snow is found in the ravines throughout the year. A railroad, connecting Beirut with Damascus, crosses the range. The chief industry of the people is the production of silk. Many sheep and goats are reared. The bulk of the inhabitants are Christians, mainly Maronites. The greatest part of the non-Christians are the Druses, who are schismatic Mohammedans. Since the massacres perpetrated by the Druses upon the Christians in 1860, the Lebanon has had a Christian governor and has been under the protection of the European powers. The population of the province is in the neighborhood of 250,000.

Lebanon, a county in the SE. part of Pennsylvania, has an area of 370 sq. m. It is intersected by the Swatara River and also drained by the Little Swatara and Tulpehocken Creek. Leghorn (It. Livorno, le-vor'no), a seaport of Italy, capital of the province of Leghorn, on a tongue of land extending into the Mediterranean, lat. 43° 32' N., lon. 10° 27' E., 50 miles WSW. of Florence. A navigable canal extends from the city to the Arno. It is well built, with spacious, regular, and well-paved streets and promenades (Via Vittorio Emanuele, Viale Regina Margherita, the latter leading to the suburb of Ardenza). It is of comparatively recent origin and hence possesses few objects of interest in architecture and art. The most remarkable buildings and establishments are the cathedrals; the church of the Madonna, with good pictures by Roselli and Volterrano; Greek churches; a synagogue, one of the finest in the world (erected in 1603); a royal palace, arsenal, and a vast cistern or reservoir for the storage of drinking water. The city has a number of open squares, adorned with imposing statues (those of Ferdinand I., Ferdinand III., Leopold II., Garibaldi, Victor Emmanuel, and Cavour). It has an exchange, naval academy, public library, theatre, museum, etc. The lazarettos are remarkable structures, that of San Leopoldo being one of the most magnificent works of the kind in Europe. The more important industries are ship-building (including armored cruisers), the making of iron-castings, copper-work, etc., and the manufacture of glass, oil, woollen and silk goods, straw bonnets, paper, soap, leather, and coral (of which last there are important fisheries).

Leghorn has an extensive trade, both general and transit, furnishing the chief source of its prosperity. The harbor is of large extent, but is somewhat difficult of entrance. The outer harbor is protected by a fine mole. The Porto Vecchio (or Medico) is no longer deep enough for the largest vessels. The roadstead, lying WNW. of the harbor, is protected by a long sandbank from the violence of the waves.

Leghorn possesses various literary, scientific, artistic, and benevolent institutions. It is the seat of a bishop. It has well-regulated bathing-establishments and has become a favorite watering-place. Leghorn had dwindled down to a fishing village when its great capabilities for commerce were discovered by the Medici family, who surrounded it with fortifications, constructed its harbor and bestowed upon it valuable privileges. Pop. as a commune in 1901, 98,321.

Leipzig, li'p'sik (Ger. Leipzig, li'p'tsai; L. Lipsia), the largest city in Saxony and the fourth city in size in the German Empire, 64 miles WNW. of Dresden, in a large and fertile plain, on the rivers Elster, Pleisse, and Parde. Lat. of observatory, 51° 20' 5" N.; lon. 12° 23' 30" E. Fine promenades on the site of the former fortifications enclose the old town, now the business section, which presents a picturesque appearance with its narrow and irregular streets, amid which are handsome modern structures, venerable edifices, and quaint shops. Without the old town lies a broad ring of modern suburban sections, with spacious thoroughfares, surrounded by an extended circle of villages still included within the municipal limits and devoted in great part to manufacturing purposes. Large suburban tracts are occupied by woods and meadows. Of the numerous squares of the old town the most important are the Augustusplatz, covering a large area, flanked by the Augusteum (the main building of the university), the post-office, the theatre, and the museum; the Johannisplatz, with the imposing Reformation monument to Luther and Melancthon (unveiled in 1833); and the Marktplatz, with a fine monument in commemoration of the war of 1870-71. The most noteworthy ecclesiastical edifices are the church of St. Thomas, founded in the thirteenth century and rebuilt in the fifteenth, noted for its boy choir; the University or Pauline Church, dedicated by Luther; the new church of St. John, containing the remains of Bach and Gellert; the church of St. Nicholas; the recently erected church of St. Peter; and the Moorish synagogue. Of the secular buildings the most notable are the fine new concert house, with sculptures by Schilling; the old concert house, famous under the name of the Gewandhaus (or Cloth Hall), in which Mendelssohn conducted, no longer devoted to musical purposes; the splendid structure of the Imperial Supreme Court, the superb Renaissance booksellers' exchange, the stock exchange, the curious sixteenth-century town-hall, the new town-hall erected on the site of the old castle (Pleissenburg), the museum, the new theatre, the observatory, the building of the imperial bank, and the university buildings, including the magnificent new library. Auerbach's Keller, a wine-cellar and tavern, has been rendered famous through its association with Goethe's "Faust."

The university of Leipzig, founded in 1409, is the third largest in Germany, being attended by over 4000 students. Its library has about 500,000 volumes. Among the other educational institutions are a municipal gymnasium, founded in the thirteenth century, at which Bach was a "cantor," the royal academy of art, the school of industrial art, a school of architecture, a commercial high-school (the first established in Germany), and the famous Royal Conservatory of Music, with over 900 students. The Grassi Museum contains valuable art, industrial, and ethnographical collections, and there are a fine historical museum of music, a notable municipal museum, a permanent exhibition of machinery and furniture, a museum of the book-trade, and a municipal library containing over 120,000 volumes. Leipzig stands foremost among the cities of the world in the bookselling and publishing trade, and is a great centre of the music trade of Europe. It is also actively engaged in the metal-industry (including iron-founding and the manufacture of machinery, mechanical apparatus, etc.), in the textile industry, in the manufacture of pianos, in the graphic industries, in the manufacture of chemicals and food-stuffs, tobacco and cigars, and paper, and in milling, brewing, etc. The great fairs of Leipzig are world-famous, an immense trade in furs, leather, cloth, and glass being carried on. Leipzig is the seat of the Supreme Court of the German Empire. Pop. in 1834, 44,802; in 1852, 65,370; in 1880, 149,081; in 1890, 293,525 (with suburbs, 353,272); in 1900, 455,089.

The city of Leipzig dates from about the beginning of the eleventh century. It early obtained great commercial prosperity under the House of Wettin. On the partition of the Saxon dominions in 1485 it passed to the Albertine line. At Breitenfeld, in the outskirts of the city, Gustavus Adolphus vanquished Tilly, the imperial general, on Sept. 7 (new style Sept. 17), 1631. The same locality witnessed the victory of the Swedes under Torstensson in 1642. At Leipzig in 1813 (Oct. 16, 18, 19) was fought the greatest battle of modern times prior to the Russo-Japanese war of 1904-05, the so-called Battle of the Nations, in which Napoleon was overwhelmed by the forces of Russia, Prussia, Austria, and Sweden, under the command of Schwarzenberg, seconded by Blücher, Bernadotte, and Bannigsen.

León (Sp. pron. lă-ôn'), an old province, representing a mediæval kingdom, in the NW. part of Spain, now divided into the provinces of León, Salamanca, and Zamora. The new province of León, in the northern portion, has an area of 5935 sq. m. with a population in 1900 of 386,083. It is mountainous in the N. and W. and watered in part by the Esla. The soil is mostly unproductive and there are few industries.

The name of KINGDOM OF LEÓN was given early in the tenth century to the little realm of Asturias, which had struggled into existence soon after the invasion of Spain by the Saracens and whose rulers had gradually extended their dominions by conquest. In 1037, León was united with Castile. In 1157 they became again separate kingdoms, but in 1230 they were reunited and henceforth remained a single realm. As a territory (larger than the old province) still recognized by geographers and frequently mentioned by writers, León is bounded N. by Asturias, E. by Old Castile, S. by Estremadura, W. by Portugal, and NW. by Galicia. The Cantabrian mountains are in the N. and the Sierra de Gata in the S. The chief stream is the Duero (Douro).

Pop. in 1900, 17,022. It is built in the form of an octagon, surrounded by ancient walls in a somewhat dilapidated state, and entered by numerous gates. The streets are generally narrow, irregular, and ill paved, and many of the houses are untenanted. A few streets, however, are handsome. There are several squares, of which the Plaza Mayor or Plaza de la Constitución focuses the life and business of the city. The fountains, some of them constructed of marble and jasper, with allegorical figures, are elegant structures. León is a bishop's see. The principal public edifices are the cathedral (begun in the thirteenth century), a splendid specimen of the purest Gothic, with its main façade composed of richly sculptured pointed arches and flanked by two towers altogether unlike, one of them of remarkable elegance; the church of San Isidro, an ancient and massive structure; the Ayuntamiento, or town-hall, hospital, theatre, episcopal palace, and the convent of San Marcos. The town has a veterinary school.

Liberia, li-bee're-â, a republic on the W. coast of Africa, extending from the English colony of Sierra Leone to the French colony of the Ivory Coast, from which it is separated by the Cavally River. It has a direct coast-line of about 300 miles and extends inland 100-200 miles. Part of the region is mountainous and covered with magnificent tropical forests, in which game is plentiful. The climate, less unhealthy than that of Sierra Leone, is extremely hot. Liberia is well watered, being traversed by several considerable streams, the most important of which is the St. Paul's. The natural resources are very great, but owing to careless cultivation, the products are limited. The chief exports are rubber, palm oil and kernels, piassava fibre, cacao, coffee, ivory, ginger, camwood, etc. Cotton, sugar, and numerous fruits are cultivated. Gold and coal are among the mineral resources. A fair export and import trade is now carried on. The principal articles of import are cotton manufactures, spirits, iron-work, petroleum, and provisions. Liberia was founded as a colony of free blacks in 1823 by the American Colonization Society, with the idea that many of the liberated slaves in the United States would return to Africa. The inhabitants have built for themselves many churches, and possess schools and a number of printing-presses, and there is a local college. The government of the country is on the American model, consisting of a president, a vice-president, a senate, and a house of representatives; there is also a council of 6 ministers. Liberia was declared an independent state in July, 1847, and in the following year was recognized as such by Great Britain and France. The population is variously estimated at between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000, of which about 20,000 represent the civilized and colonized negroes. The natives of the coast-strip are Krumen. Liberia is divided into the four counties of Mesurado, Grand Bassa, Sinu (Sinoë), and Maryland. Capital, Monrovia.

Liège, le'zh' (L. Leo'dium, Lie'gia; Dutch, Luik, loik; Ger. Lüttich, lüt'tîk), a city of Belgium, capital of the province of Liège, 54 miles E. by S. of Brussels. It is picturesquely situated on the Meuse, at the influx of the Ourthe, and is surrounded by a circle of forts. The Meuse divides the city into the old town on the left bank, in which are the citadel and principal public buildings, and the new town on the right, containing the numerous manufacturing establishments and the homes of large numbers of the artisans. The newer sections are well built, and even in the old and cramped quarters of the city many improvements have been made. Of the numerous open places the most attractive is the Square d'Avroy. The most noteworthy edifices are the magnificent church of St. Jacques (eleventh century), the church of St. Paul, now the cathedral, founded in the tenth century and rebuilt in the thirteenth, with fine chimies; the church of Ste. Croix (founded in the tenth century), with an octagonal tower; the church of St. Barthélemy, with an interesting twelfth-century font; the imposing Gothic church of St. Martin; the church of St. Denis; the handsome Académie des Beaux Arts; the Théâtre Royal, built after the model of the Odéon at Paris; the splendid Palais de Justice, and the town-hall. Liège has a university, founded in 1817, which has over 1800 students, among them many foreigners. The university library contains about 200,000 volumes. Affiliated with the university are the School of Mines, Arts, and Manufactures and the School of Electricity. The city possesses a noted conservatory of music and an academy of art.

Liège owes its great industrial prosperity to its situation in the centre of a rich coal district. Some of the mines actually extend under the streets and houses. The oldest and most important branch of industry is the manufacture of arms, including cannon. There are extensive manufactures of machinery and articles of steel and iron, and the textile industry is also well represented. Among other articles produced in Liège are watches, gold- and silver-ware, leather, paper, oil, tobacco, and chicory. Near by is Seraing, with its vast machine-shops. Liège is the seat of an active commerce. The town is the centre of the Walloon country. The population has nearly trebled since the middle of the nineteenth century. Pop. in 1900, 173,706. Liège has since Frankish times been the seat of a bishop. The bishops of Liège were among the princes of the Holy Roman (German) Empire and ruled a large territory. They were engaged in interminable conflicts with the burghers of Liège. The French conquered the region at the close of the eighteenth century, and after that it shared the fortunes of Belgium.

Lima, lee'mā (anc. Lim'ia), a river of Spain and Portugal, rises in Galicia, flows SW. for about 100 miles, and enters the Atlantic at Viana. It is navigable only for 12 miles.

Lima, lee'mā, a city, the capital of Peru and also of a department and province of its own name, is situated about 7 miles from its port, Callao, on the Pacific Ocean, with which it is connected by railroad. Lat. 12° 3' S.; lon. 76° 6' W. It stands at the foot of granitic hills and on both banks of the Rimac, here crossed by two bridges, which divides the city into two unequal portions. The larger division of the town, on the S. or left bank of the river, was formerly walled, but is now surrounded by boulevards; the smaller, or suburb of San Lázaro, is on the right bank. The streets of the city are narrow, generally badly paved, and intersect one another at right angles. The numerous domes and spires give to Lima an imposing appearance when viewed from a distance. The grand square, Plaza Mayor or Plaza de Armas, together with the adjoining streets, is the central point of its life and business. It is a regular quadrangle and has two sides occupied by the Portales. On the sides of the square stand the palace and offices of the government, the archbishop's palace, the cathedral (begun about 1535), and the senate-house and town-hall. There are in all upward of 30 squares or plazas in the city. Among the numerous buildings and institutions, other than those of a religious character, are the mint (founded in 1565), institute for industrial arts, military school, schools of engineering and navigation, national museum and library, museum of antiquities, geographical society (1888), and university, the last, founded in 1551, being the oldest institution of its kind in South America. There are various other technical and collegiate institutions and numerous charitable associations. The city has zoological and botanical gardens, exhibition palaces, and a vast bull-ring. Its monumental works include statues of Bolívar (in the Plaza de la Independencia) and Columbus.

Lima was long the grand commercial entrepôt for all the W. coast of South America and it still has a considerable trade through its port Callao. Its exports consist of silver, copper-ore, cinchona, soap, vicuña wool, chinchilla skins, nitre, sugar, etc. The manufactures are in general unimportant. The climate is very agreeable. The range of the thermometer throughout the year is from about 67° in winter to 87° in summer. From April to October a heavy and sometimes chilly mist overhangs the city in the mornings and evenings. Rain, even in partial showers, is of exceedingly rare occurrence; thunder and lightning are practically unknown. Lima is somewhat subject to earthquakes. The most destructive on record occurred in Oct., 1746, when many houses and public buildings were destroyed.

Lima was founded by Pizarro in 1535. It was at first called Ciudad de los Reyes, in commemoration of the festival day of the kings, on which the site was chosen. It was the seat of the Spanish viceroys of Peru, and when the rule of Spain came to an end it became the capital of the republic. It was taken by the Chileans in 1881. Pop. in 1876, 100,073; in 1891, 103,956; and in 1903, 130,000, of whom the whites, creoles, and foreigners constituted about a third.

Lisbon, lis'bōn (Port. and Sp. Lisboa, Fr. Lisbonne, leeb'bonn'; It. Lisbona, lis-bo'pá; Ger. Lissabon, lis'sabon; anc. Olis'ipo), a city, capital of the kingdom of Portugal, in Estremadura, on the right bank of the Tagus, near its mouth in the Atlantic Ocean. Lat. of observatory,  $38^{\circ} 42' 31'' N.$ ; lon.  $9^{\circ} 11' 10'' W.$  It is built on a succession of hills rising from the quays in the form of an amphitheatre and produces an imposing effect when viewed from the river. With the extension of the city limits in 1885, so as to include the suburbs of Alcántara, Junqueira, Belem, and Pedroncos, the area covered by the present city is 50 sq. m., and it extends for more than 6 miles along the Tagus. It is divided into three main quarters,—Lisboa Oriental, the old town; Cidade Baixa, or Low Lisbon, the middle town, rebuilt since the earthquake of 1755; and Lisboa Occidental, the modern Lisbon proper,—which sections are delimited on the landward side by the new Estrada Militar, or Road of the New Circumvallation, 25 miles in length. The streets in the older portion of the city are steep, narrow, and crooked. The portion, however, which was rebuilt after the great earthquake of 1755 and the new quarters have many fine streets and promenades (Avenida da Liberdade, Alameda de São Pedro de Alcántara, Rua d'Ouro, Rua da Prata, Rua Augusta) and open squares. The most notable of the latter are the Praça do Commercio, surrounded on three sides by the naval arsenal, the exchange, custom-house, post-office, and other public buildings, and having the Tagus on the S., with an equestrian statue of José I. in the centre; the Praça de Figueira, a square of a remarkably picturesque appearance, used as a public market; and the Rocio (or Praça Dom Pedro IV.), with a national theatre. The Praça de Camões contains a monument to the author of the Lusiad. The city contains several royal palaces.

Excepting the castle of São Jorge, the old Moorish citadel, remarkable for the beauty of its situation, the noteworthy buildings besides those already adverted to are mainly churches and convents. Among the former are the cathedral or patriarchal church, on the slope of the castle-hill; the church of São Domingos; the church of the Heart of Jesus, on the hill of Estrela; the church of the Martyrs, the handsome church of Santa Engracia; São Vicente de Fora; the church of São Roque; and Santa Maria de Belem. The numerous convents which crown the hills, and appear like palaces and fortresses, are for the most part massive and imposing structures. The most famous of these is the Hieronymite convent of Belem, founded by Prince Henry the Navigator. The palace of the Cortes, or house of parliament, is the secularized convent of São Bento. The royal theatre of São Carlos, or Italian opera-house, is a large and splendid edifice. The city is supplied with water by means of two vast aqueducts,—the Aqueducto das Aguas Livres and the Aqueducto de Alveilla.

The scientific, educational, and literary institutions comprise the royal academy of sciences, royal marine academy, royal academy of artillery and engineers, royal military college, school of music, national library containing upward of 400,000 volumes, polytechnic institute (with natural history museum, botanical garden, astronomical observatory, and meteorological station), medical college, archaeological and ethnographic museums, museum of fine arts, artillery museum, colonial museum, and geographical society. The city has many hospitals and institutions of charity.

Lisbon is admirably situated for commerce. The harbor is one of the finest in the world and the quays, which extend several miles along the bank of the river, attest the extent of its trade. The exports consist chiefly of wine, oil, fruit, salt, cork, and fish. The domestic manufactures are silk, paper, soap, cottons, woollens, machinery, and chemicals. There are also sugar-refineries, glass-works, and potteries. The goldsmiths and jewellers are highly esteemed. There are government manufactories of artillery, small-arms, and ammunition. The city and its surroundings have recently been converted into a great fortress. Lisbon is the seat of a Catholic patriarch.

Lisbon was originally called by the ancients Olisipo or Ulyssipo. Felicitas Julia was its name as a Roman municipality. It was captured by the Saracens in 716 and remained under Mohammedan rule till 1147, when it was taken by Alfonso I. In 1755 it was visited by an earthquake, which threw down a considerable portion of the city and destroyed about 30,000–40,000 of its inhabitants. Of this calamity traces are still visible. The population is very mixed, containing natives from every province of Portugal, negroes, mulattoes, and Gallegos, or natives of Galicia. Pop. in 1900, 357,000.

Liverpool, a city and county borough of England, within the territorial limits of Lancashire, the third city of Great Britain and after London the leading commercial port of Europe, is situated on the E. bank of the Mersey estuary, 3 miles from the Irish Sea and 175 miles NW. of London. Lat. of observatory, 53° 24' 4" N.; lon. 3° 4' 20" W. Pop. in 1801, 82,000; in 1851, 375,000; in 1881, 552,425; in 1891, 629,548; in 1901, inclusive of Walton-on-the-Hill, Wavertree, West Derby, and Toxteth Park, united suburbs, 684,958. Liverpool has a pre-eminently commercial aspect. It extends several miles in length over gently rising ground, the highest point within the border being about 250 feet above the quay wall of the river. Though irregularly laid out, it has many broad, straight, and handsome thoroughfares. The busiest of these is Castle Street, the "embodiment of Liverpool's character and the centre of its system." Along the shore there is a line of docks and basins over 6 miles in length, having an aggregate water area of 390 acres and a quay space 26 miles in extent, reclaimed from the river. The warehousing room attached to these docks is very extensive; grain, cotton, and tobacco, especially, are stored in great quantities. The principal docks are the Hornby, Alexandra (with a water area of 44 acres), Langton, Canada, Waterloo, Prince's, King's, Queen's, and Stanley Docks. The huge Canada Graving Dock measures 925 ft. in length. Other large docks are found at Birkenhead, opposite Liverpool, and connected with that city by the Mersey Tunnel,  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile in length. The great Landing Stage of Liverpool, a vast quay serving as the starting-point of ocean steamers, is 2463 ft. in length and rests on about 200 pontoons. The oldest public building of the city is the town-hall, erected in 1754; and nearly adjoining it is the exchange, the construction of which was begun in 1864. Other buildings of note are the municipal offices (erected in 1860), custom-house, public library, Free Public Museums, Walker Fine Art Gallery, Royal Institution, and St. George's Hall,—the last-named erected in 1838-54, in the form of a Greco-Roman temple, 600 ft. in length, being the finest architectural feature of the city. It contains a public meeting hall, courts, and public offices. The more advanced educational institutions are the University of Liverpool, Liverpool Institute, Liverpool College, Government School of Art, and the Medical School. Botanical gardens and public parks form, with the private grounds open at times to the public, an almost continuous band of open space on the landward side of the city. In the extreme S. is Sefton Park, covering an area of about 400 acres, and elaborately laid out. Other parks are Prince's and Stanley. Among the municipal undertakings recently executed is an aqueduct 68 miles long, which brings water from Vyrnwy Lake, in Wales. The municipality has erected many dwellings for the working people. The leading industries of Liverpool are milling, iron- and steel-working, sugar-refining, ship-building, and the manufacture of ropes and chemicals. The city has also important manufactures of watches and jewelry, glass-works, brass-foundries, distilleries, and breweries; and there are extensive works for making steam-engines, machinery, chains, cables, anchors, etc. But the city owes its chief importance to its being a great seat of foreign export and import trade. It is the main outlet for the manufactures of Lancashire, Yorkshire, and Staffordshire, and carries on the principal part of the trade of England with Australia, America, India, Africa, and the Mediterranean. The Mersey at high water may be entered by the largest ships, vast sums having been expended on the river in securing safe anchorage and dock accommodation. Nearly all the raw cotton imported into Great Britain is brought to Liverpool. The entire foreign commerce of Liverpool in 1900 was valued at £227,350,000. The imports in 1899 were £110,000,000, of which the value of the raw cotton was £22,500,000 and of grain and flour £14,800,000. The exports during the same year amounted to £97,300,000, 84 per cent. of which represented British products. In the value of its exports Liverpool surpasses London. The merchant marine consisted in 1899 of 1060 steamers and of 1025 sailing vessels, registering together 2,200,000 tons. Liverpool is connected by steamship lines with the principal ports of the world. The borough is divided into 28 wards, and governed by a mayor, 28 aldermen, and 84 councillors. It sends 9 members to the House of Commons. It is the seat of a Roman Catholic and of an Anglican bishop. Liverpool was still a village in the time of Queen Elizabeth, and in 1700 the population was only about 5000. It rose to great commercial importance in the course of the eighteenth century, the active participation of its merchants in the slave-trade serving to lay the foundations of its prosperity. The first important line of steam railway in the world, that connecting Liverpool with Manchester, was opened in 1830.

It now constitutes a compartimento of the kingdom of Italy, comprising the provinces of Bergamo, Brescia, Como, Cremona, Mantua, Milan, Pavia, and Sondrio. Area, about 9374 sq. m. Pop. in 1901, 4,282,728. It is bounded on the N. by Switzerland and Tyrol and lies between Piedmont on the W. and Venetia on the E. It consists mainly of a rich plain traversed by the Po, Ticino, Adda, Oglio, and other rivers, splendidly irrigated and supplied with navigable canals, but the N. is covered by the Alps. Lago Maggiore and Lago di Garda are on the W. and E. borders respectively. Lakes Como and Iseo are within Lombardy and part of Lago di Lugano projects into it. Among the principal products are maize, wheat, rice, silk, wine, and cheese. Fruits thrive and there are rich pastures. With respect to manufactures, Lombardy is the leading division of Italy. The principal city is Milan.

The Lombard kingdom in Italy endured only about two centuries. In 774 it was overthrown by Charles the Great, ruler of the Franks. Two centuries later Lombardy became part of the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation. The flourishing cities grew to be little republics and, having formed the Lombard League, successfully contended, in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, against the domination of the German emperors. Before the close of the Middle Ages the dukes of Milan had established their sway over the greater part of Lombardy. In the first half of the sixteenth century the duchy of Milan became a possession of Spain. At the beginning of the eighteenth century this territory passed by conquest to Austria, which at the same time took possession of the duchy of Mantua. Austrian rule was interrupted by the conquests of Bonaparte. In 1815 the Lombardo-Venetian Kingdom was constituted as a part of the Austrian Empire. In 1848 there was an unsuccessful rising against Austria. In 1859 Lombardy was wrested from Austria and annexed to the kingdom of Sardinia, and in 1861 it became part of the new kingdom of Italy.

Londinières, lon'dee-ne-ais', a town of France, in Seine-Inférieure, 7 miles N. of Neufchâtel. Pop. 1000.

London, lôn'don (L. Londin'ium; Fr. Londres; Sp. Londres; It. Londra), the capital of England, the seat of government of the British Empire, and the most populous city of the world, situated on both banks of the Thames, 60 miles from its mouth, in the cos. of Middlesex, Surrey, Essex, and Kent. The metropolis consists of the so-called "City," comprised within an area of a little more than one square mile (which has an individual administration, and is presided over by the Lord Mayor), and 28 metropolitan boroughs, as follows: Battersea, Bermondsey, Bethnal Green, Camberwell, Chelsea, Deptford, Finsbury, Fulham, Greenwich, Hackney, Hammersmith, Hampstead, Holborn, Islington, Kensington, Lambeth, Lewisham, Paddington, Poplar, St. Marylebone, St. Pancras, Shoreditch, Southwark, Stepney, Stoke Newington, Wandsworth, City of Westminster, and Woolwich. The City proper sends 2 members to parliament, the metropolitan boroughs send 57 members, and the University of London has a single member. In 1888 the administrative county of London was organized, coinciding nearly with the collective area of the parliamentary boroughs. This comprises 117 sq. m. Beyond this is a five-fold area included, together with London County, in the Metropolitan and City of London Police Districts. The area of Greater London is about 700 sq. m., but even beyond this there is a large array of towns, some of them of great size, whose activities are in great measure merged in those of the capital. Lat. of St. Paul's Cathedral, 51° 30' 49" N.; lon. 0° 5' 48" W. of Greenwich.

Metropolitan London extends from Woolwich on the E. to Kew on the W., over a length of about 16 miles. It comprises upward of 600,000 buildings. Unlike what prevails in the great cities of the Continent, the dwelling-houses of London are mostly small, a large proportion of them being occupied by a single family. The very poor, however, live in great part in crowded tenements, vast numbers of families having dwelling-places consisting of only a single room. The rate of mortality is remarkably low. London may be conveniently divided into the City and the East End, or that portion of the metropolis which lies E. of the law-buildings of the Temple and in which is centred the commercial activity of the city; and the West End, that portion of the metropolis lying W. of the Temple,—London of the clubs, museums, galleries of art, theatres, government offices, Houses of Parliament, Westminster Abbey, the mansions of the aristocracy, and the royal palaces. In a further subdivision we have well-defined districts lying on opposite sides of the Thames: those of Whitechapel, Houndsditch and the Minories (quarters of the Jews), Bethnal Green and Spitalfields (centres of the furniture- and boot- and shoe-industries), Clerkenwell (a district of metal-workers), Paternoster Row (the focus of the book-trade), and Chancery Lane and Inns of Court (the domain of members of the legal profession)—all on the left or N. bank of the river; Southwark and Lambeth (with numerous potteries, glass-works, and breweries), Bermondsey (celebrated for its tanneries and wool-warehouses), Rotherhithe (inhabited by shipping men), Deptford (a great cattle-mart), Greenwich (with its renowned observatory and Greenwich Hospital, no longer used as an asylum), and Woolwich (with its royal arsenal, the Military Academy, and dock-yards)—all on the right bank of the Thames. Adjoining the metropolitan district on the E., on the N. side of the Thames, is the great manufacturing quarter (a county borough in itself) called West Ham. To the E. of this is East Ham, and a little beyond it Barking. Among the southern suburban quarters, proceeding from W. to E., are Putney, Wimbledon, Tooting, Streatham, Croydon, Norwood, Dulwich, Sydenham (near which is the Crystal Palace), Bromley, and Chislehurst. In the northern suburban section are Highgate, Hornsey, and Tottenham. Among the places situated on the tortuous Thames immediately above the metropolis are Brentford, Richmond, Twickenham, and Kingston, near which last is Hampton Court. In the northwestern outskirts of London is Harrow-on-the-Hill. The Thames is crossed by numerous bridges, among which the most noted are the London Bridge, connecting the City with Southwark, replacing the older bridge that was removed in 1832, and measuring 928 feet in length; the Waterloo Bridge, one of the finest bridges in the world, measuring 1380 ft. in length; Westminster Bridge, 1160 ft. in length; Blackfriars Bridge; and the Tower Bridge, opened in 1894, with a footway 143 ft. above high-water, to be used when the regular bridgeway is raised for the passage of vessels. The famous Thames Tunnel, which unites Wapping with Rotherhithe, was completed in 1843, and is 1200 ft. in length. The Blackwall Tunnel, opened in 1897, connects Blackwall with East Greenwich, and has a length of 4470 ft., and, with the open approaches, of 6210 ft. There are several other tunnels constructed or in course of construction.

Of the comparatively recent and most important improvements of the metropolis are the Thames embankments—the Victoria Embankment, between Westminster and Blackfriars bridges, on the N. side of the Thames, constructed in 1864-70, and measuring 1½ miles in length; the Albert Embankment, on the opposite side of the river, between Westminster and Vauxhall bridges, and completed in 1869; and the Chelsea Embankment, opened in 1873. London is well supplied with squares, gardens, and parks, many of which are adorned with imposing monuments. Among the most noted of these are Trafalgar Square, immediately adjoining Charing Cross, embellished with a granite column 145 feet in height erected to the memory of Nelson; Waterloo Place, with the Crimean monument; Berkeley, Hanover, Cavendish, Bedford, and Russell Squares; Lincoln's Inn Fields, surrounded by lawyers' offices; St. James's Park, adjoining the royal residence, Buckingham Palace (on the site of the older Buckingham House); Hyde Park, covering 390 acres, one of the centres of life of the metropolis, and during the "season" the rendezvous of fashion and eminence; the Kensington Gardens, covering 240 acres, and noted for their exquisite expanses of turf; Regent's Park, embracing 472 acres, and containing the famous zoological gardens, among the best cared-for gardens of their class in the world; Battersea Park, on the S. side of the Thames; and Victoria Park, at the E. end, covering 217 acres.

The streets that most intimately reflect the life, growth, and history of the metropolis are Pall Mall, a street of palaces and the centre of club life, containing the Marlborough House, residence of the Prince of Wales; Piccadilly, on which is the Burlington House, the home of the Royal Academy of Arts, the Royal Society, and various other scientific associations; Regent Street, containing a large number of the finest shops of the city; the Strand, one of the busiest thoroughfares connecting the centre of the city with the West End; Fleet Street, a continuation of the Strand, also remarkable for its bustle; Whitehall; Cheap-side, a street lined with handsome shops and rich in historical associations; Lombard Street, the most noted street for banking and finance; Cornhill; Oxford Street, the main artery of traffic between the NW. quarter and the City; Highholborn, one of the streets that survived the great fire of 1666, of which the Holborn Viaduct, bridging a deep depression, is a continuation; and Chancery Lane, traversing the quarter occupied by members of the legal profession.

No city of the world, with the exception of Paris, has so many structures and institutions of historical, literary, scientific, and artistic moment or importance as London. Foremost among these are St. Paul's Cathedral, designed by Sir Christopher Wren, erected in 1675-1710, and measuring 500 feet in length and 364 feet in height to the top of the cross on its vast dome; Westminster Abbey, the Walhalla of the English nation, dating in its present form (in part) from the latter half of the thirteenth century, and measuring 513 feet in length, one of the most famous churches of the world; the Houses of Parliament, a vast Gothic pile dating from 1840, which extends along the left bank of the Thames for a distance of 940 feet and whose square Victoria Tower is 340 feet high; the Mansion House, the official residence of the Lord Mayor; the Guild-hall, or Council Hall of the City; the Royal Courts of Justice, a magnificent Gothic edifice with a frontage of 500 feet, opened in 1882; Lambeth Palace, the seat of the Archbishop of Canterbury; the British Museum, with a vast collection of Egyptian, Assyrian, Greek, and Roman antiquities, the famous Elgin Marbles, British prehistoric remains, an unrivalled collection of original drawings, engravings, and etchings, and a library of upward of 2,000,000 volumes; the Natural History Museum, containing the natural history collections properly belonging to the British Museum, and occupying a building (erected in 1873-80) the largest in the world devoted to collections of its class; the South Kensington Museum (or Victoria and Albert Museum), containing magnificent collections of ornamental or applied art, Oriental and other collections, the National Art Library, etc.; the National Gallery, one of the great galleries of painting in the world; the Bank of England (the only bank in London issuing paper money), founded in 1694, and occupying a building which covers about 4 acres,—a huge but dreary edifice, in whose vaults are usually housed 20 million pounds sterling in gold and silver; Christ's Hospital, which until recently housed a famous school for boys (Bluecoat Boys) and girls (now at Horsham, Sussex), founded in 1553; the Charterhouse, an asylum for poor old men, and until recently also the seat of a celebrated grammar school, now located at Godalming, Surrey; St. Bartholomew's Hospital (founded in 1123); and the Tower (dating back to William the Conqueror), historically the most interesting structure of all England,—at first a royal palace and stronghold, and afterwards a gloomy dungeon or state prison of London, and now containing the crown-jewels and a large collection of old armor. The most famous monument of the city is the Albert Memorial, erected to the memory of Albert, Prince Consort, and adorned with reliefs in marble of 178 figures.

London stands pre-eminent in the number of its higher institutions of learning, its associations for the cultivation of the arts and sciences, and its special technical schools. In this class may be enumerated the University of London, founded as an examining body in 1836 and reorganized in 1900-1901 into a body which in addition to its examining functions has control of the higher education in the metropolis, the principal institutions, including most of the medical schools, being subject to it; University College, opened in 1828; King's College, opened in 1831; Royal College of Science, founded as the Royal School of Mines in association with the Geological Survey of Great Britain; Central Technical College, Gresham College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital and College, London Hospital Medical College, Guy's Hospital Medical School, Royal College of Surgeons (with the famous Hunterian Museum), Royal College of Music, the schools of art of the Royal Academy and South Kensington Museum, the Inns of Court, Imperial Institute of the United Kingdom (the Colonies and India, with a huge building erected in 1887-93), Royal Institution, British Academy (founded in 1901), British Association for the Advancement of Science, Institute of Architects, Institution of Civil and Mechanical Engineers, Royal Geographical Society, Royal Asiatic Society, the Geological, Zoological, Botanical, Linnæan, Astronomical, Archaeological, Chemical, and Physical societies, Society of British Artists, Society of Painters in Water Colors, Society of Arts, etc. The theatres and music-halls embrace the Royal Albert Hall, a vast amphitheatre, constructed in 1867-71 and having a seating capacity of 8000; Covent Garden Theatre or Royal Italian Opera, with accommodation for 3500 persons; Drury Lane Theatre, Haymarket Theatre, etc. It is estimated that the theatres and music-halls (of which latter there are about 500) are visited by 325,000 people nightly. There are about 600 newspapers published in London and its immediate environs.

The manufacturing industries of London are on a vast scale, and embrace an immense range of products. There were engaged in the manufacture of clothing and wearing apparel in 1901, 393,000 men and women; the construction of machinery employed 53,791 persons; the manufacture of furniture, 50,000; of chemicals, 23,643; glassware, 8700. Other important manufactures are those of silks, soap, refined sugar, paper, carpets, surgical, optical, and mathematical instruments, outlery, watches and jewelry, hats, boots and shoes, tobacco, malted and other liquors, etc. London is the greatest commercial and financial centre and the foremost port in the world. The city commands one-third of the imports of the United Kingdom. The value of the imports in 1900 was £175,000,000, of which South African and Australian wool made up £17,000,000, grain, £12,000,000, tea, £10,000,000, and sugar, £8,000,000. The exports in the same year amounted to £91,502,000, of which home manufactured cottons were valued at £5,500,000, clothing at £3,000,000, woollens (including carpets and yarns) at £4,000,000, and iron-manufactures at £5,000,000. The merchant marine, which is only second to that of Liverpool, consisted, in 1901, of 1728 steamers and 1299 sailing vessels, together registering 1,716,616 tons. The docks of the "Port of London," with which are associated vast warehouses, magazines, and cellars for storage, packing, loading, etc., are the property of private joint-stock companies. They are the London Docks, constructed in 1805, and covering 100 acres; the St. Katharine Docks, covering 23 acres; the Surrey Commercial Docks, covering about 350 acres; the West India Docks; the East India Docks; the Millwall Docks, covering 100 acres; and the Royal Victoria and Albert Docks, covering 500 acres (of which 180 are water) and measuring 2½ miles in length.

London is supplied with a vast network of surface railroads (in addition to a host of omnibuses and cabs) and with underground railways known as the Metropolitan and Metropolitan District Railways, besides several lines of underground electric railway recently constructed. The chief railroad lines of England have terminal stations within the city, with offices, hotels, etc., constituting some of the largest buildings of the city (Charing Cross, Paddington, Euston Square, St. Pancras, King's Cross, Marylebone, Liverpool Street, Waterloo, Victoria, etc., stations).

The population of the parliamentary boroughs of London in 1901, was 4,536,541, of which number 26,923 belonged to the City of London or City proper. Of the total population there were about 250,000 of Irish descent, 123,000 Scotch, 110,000 Poles and Russians (mostly Jews), 85,000 Germans, 36,000 French and Belgians, and 20,000 Americans and Canadians. Three-quarters of the population belong to the Anglican church. The population of the Metropolitan and City of London Police Districts, or of what is known as Greater London, in 1901 was 6,580,616. The average annual temperature is 50.5°; temperature of summer, 62°; temperature of winter, 39°. Mean annual rainfall, 23.6 inches.

London was a busy trading-place under the Romans, by whom it was enclosed with a wall. The city asserted its importance in Anglo-Saxon times. About the beginning of the seventh century, when it was included in the realm of the East Saxons, it was made the seat of a bishop. It grew in prominence in the time of the wars with the Danes, to whom its sturdy inhabitants offered heroic resistance, and finally became the capital of Saxon England. William the Conqueror gave London a charter. The city flourished under the Plantagenets. The expansion of England under the Tudors and Stuarts gave a great impetus to the growth of London, which in the seventeenth century overtook Paris in population. It was visited by the plague in 1665, and in the following year a conflagration (the Great Fire) destroyed about 13,000 houses. The new London that rose from the ashes exhibited a great architectural transformation. A large array of splendid edifices testified to the genius of Christopher Wren. The census of 1801 gave London a population of 864,000, far exceeding that of any city in Christendom. By 1841 the figure had more than doubled through natural increase and the absorption of circumadjacent towns and parishes. In 1851, the year in which the first international exposition (World's Fair) was held in Hyde Park, London counted 2,362,000 inhabitants. In the next half century the population doubled.

Surface, in the S. and centre, mountainous; elsewhere, mostly lowland, with a fertile soil. Chief rivers, the Foyle, in the NW., and the Bann, on the E. border, rich in salmon. The linen industry is extensively carried on. The county was granted to a number of London companies by James I.; hence the prefix of London to the ancient name of the county. Capital, Londonderry. Pop. in 1841, 222,460; in 1901, 144,330.

Londonderry, a municipal and parliamentary borough of Ireland, capital of the co. of Londonderry, finely situated on the Foyle, 5 miles above Lough Foyle and 123 miles NNW. of Dublin. It is connected by a bridge with the extensive suburb of Waterside. A portion of the town is still surrounded by the old walls, which now serve as promenades. The principal buildings are the handsome Roman Catholic Cathedral, the court-house, and the guild-hall. A triumphal arch commemorates the defence of the town against James II. The industries of Londonderry comprise distilling, brewing, tanning, the manufacture of linen, iron-founding, and ship-building. The salmon-fishery is extensive. Londonderry is the seat of an active trade by sea. Pop. in 1901, 39,873. Londonderry is an ancient town. It acquired importance in the seventeenth century, after the region in which it stands had been made over to the London companies. It was a stronghold of the Orangites, and in 1689 heroically and successfully held out against the forces of James II.

Lorraine, a region comprising about 9000 sq. m., belonging about three-fourths to France and one-fourth to Germany. It constituted one of the administrative divisions or provinces of the French monarchy at the time of the Revolution under the official title of Lorraine-et-Barrois. French Lorraine is included in the departments of Meuse (capital, Verdun), Meurthe-et-Moselle (capital, Nancy), and Vosges (capital, Epinal). The part belonging to Germany constitutes the district of Lorraine (Lothringen) in the Reichsland (imperial territory) of Alsace-Lorraine (capital, Metz). The province of Lorraine-et-Barrois, created only a quarter of a century before the Revolution (when it was divided up into departments), was formed out of the old duchy of Lorraine, the duchy of Bar, the bishoprics of Toul, Metz, and Verdun, French Luxembourg (Thionville, now Diedenhofen, Montmédy, Longwy), the duchy of Bouillon, and German Lorraine (district watered by the Saar). The name Lorraine is from the Latin Lotharingia (Ger. Lothringen), a designation which in its original form (Lotharii Regnum,—i.e., the "Kingdom of Lothair") was given to the country inherited in 855 by Lothair II., the great-grandson of Charles the Great. This realm, a fragment of the mighty Frankish empire, embraced an extensive region between the Rhine on the E. and the Meuse and Scheldt on the W., and reaching from the head-waters of the Saône to the North Sea. This state soon disappeared, but the name was revived. At the time of the establishment of the Holy Roman Empire of the German nation, in the tenth century, there were two Lotharingian duchies included in it,—Upper Lorraine and Lower Lorraine. These became gradually disintegrated. About the close of the twelfth century the name of Brabant supplanted that of Lower Lorraine, and Upper Lorraine became simply Lorraine, a name which thus came to designate a very small region by the side of the original Lotharingia. The dukes of Lorraine, whose capital was Nancy, continued to rule as members of the Germanic body (though the connection with the empire was at the end very loose) down to 1766, when, on the death of Stanislas Leszczyński, ex-king of Poland, the duchy passed, in virtue of the treaties of Vienna of 1735 and 1738, to France. The Lotharingian bishoprics of Toul, Metz, and Verdun had been severed from the German Empire and annexed to France in 1552. In 1871 France was compelled to cede German Lorraine and Metz (with its district) to Germany.

Lorraine (Ger. Lothringen, lö't-rîng-en), a district in the German Reichsland of Alsace-Lorraine, bordering on Rhenish Prussia, the Palatinate, Alsace, and France. Area, 2400 sq. m. It is rich in coal and iron, and there are a number of large iron-works. Large quantities of salt are obtained. Much wine is produced. Capital, Metz. Pop. in 1900, 564,116, about seven-eighths Catholics. The French language predominates in the circles of Metz and Châteausalins.

noted for the amenity of its climate, the beauty of its flowering gardens and walks (embowered in a subtropical vegetation of pepper-trees, eucalyptus, live-oak, india-rubber, Norfolk pine, palmetto, etc.), and the excellence of its fruits. Oranges, lemons, and figs flourish in the open air, and it has extensive vineyards, the product of which is converted into wine. Fruits, wine, and wool are the chief articles of export; petroleum and gold are obtained in the vicinity. The city is provided with several parks, of which Griffith Park covers 3000 acres. It is the seat of Baptist, Catholic, and Presbyterian colleges, of the University of Southern California, and of a state normal school. Among the more notable buildings are the Federal building, court-house, Roman Catholic cathedral, and the Blanchard Art Building. It possesses a public library of over 100,000 volumes. The refining of petroleum is an important industry. Los Angeles is the centre of the Southern California railroad systems (Southern Pacific, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Coast Line, the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake) and is in steamship communication with San Francisco. The mild climate has made it a favorite resort with invalids, especially those suffering from pulmonary affections. Pop. in 1880, 11,183; in 1890, 50,395; in 1900, 102,479.

Louisburg, loo'is-burg, an outpost of Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, on the SE. shore of the island, 39 miles SE. of Sydney, on the Sydney and Louisburg R. The French erected a fortress here at an expense of 30,000,000 livres, and while Louisburg remained in their occupancy it exported 500,000 quintals of cod annually, and 600 vessels were employed in its trade and fisheries. The fortress was taken by the British and the American colonists in 1745 and again in 1758, and after its final capture the British government demolished the fortifications. Since then the harbor has been largely deserted and the old town is almost in ruins; but the place has in a measure revived and become a railway terminus and a port of call for steamers. Louisburg has a fine harbor, open the year round. Pop. in 1901, 1588.

Louis Corners, a post-village of Manitowoc co., Wis., 5 miles from Kiel.

Louise, loo-ees', a post-village of Wharton co., Tex., in a cotton, grain, and stock region, 24 miles by rail SW. of Wharton. Pop. 100.

Louiseville, a banking town of Maskinonge co., Quebec, on the Canadian Pacific R., 74 miles NE. of Montreal. Near by are St. Leon Springs. Pop. in 1901, 1655.

Louisiade (loo-ee-se-äd') Archipelago, an extensive group of islands, belonging to British New Guinea, in the Pacific Ocean, comprised between the parallels of 10° 40' and 11° 40' S. lat. and the meridians of 151° and 154° 30' E. lon. The principal islands are Rossel, Southeast Island, Piron, Joannet, Pig, and St. Aignan. There are mountain elevations rising to 2800 and 3400 feet. The islands are composed of ancient rocks and some gold has been found and worked. They are inhabited chiefly by savage Papuans.

Louisiana, one of the Gulf States of the American Union, is bounded N. by Arkansas and Mississippi, E. by Mississippi and the Gulf of Mexico, S. by the Gulf of Mexico, and W. by Texas. On the N. it is limited partly by the 31st and partly by the 33d parallel of N. lat. The rivers Mississippi and Pearl wash its eastern borders, and the Sabine forms the greater part of the western boundary. Area of the land-surface, 45,420 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, about 3300 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—There are few points in the state the elevation of which above sea-level much exceeds 200–250 feet (elevation of New Arcadia, 362 ft.). In the central and northern sections there are extensive tracts of undulating or even hilly ground. Farther southward the country is more level, with extensive forests and swamps, and in the SW. there are wide grassy prairies. The great delta of the Mississippi is largely made up of swamp-lands, slightly elevated above the sea-level, and subject to occasional overflow; and even the habitable and cultivable lands are only measurably protected from the freshets of the Mississippi through the system of dikes and levees that have been constructed at a great expense for the restraint of the river within its banks. The marshy portions of the state are in many parts traversed by brûles, or elevated dry ridges, which are very generally inhabited. Most of the bayous which formerly flowed out from the Mississippi and made the southern part of the state a true delta have been cut off from their connection with the parent stream by the levees. The Great Pine Belt enters Louisiana from southern Mississippi, and, with some interruptions, extends westward across the state, terminating in eastern Texas. On the W. and NW. of the alluvial valley of the Mississippi extends a low but precipitous range of sandstone hills.

Rivers, etc.—The state has a copious water-supply, and the number of rivers, creeks, bayous, lakes, and sloughs is very large. The principal river after the Mississippi is its affluent, the Red River, which traverses the northern half of the state. Steam navigation is carried on upon the Mississippi and Red rivers, the Atchafalaya, Ouachita, Tèche, Sabine, and several smaller rivers and bayous. Lakes Pontchartrain and Borgne afford steamboat communication with Mobile via the almost landlocked Mississippi Sound. There are required in this state for the Mississippi alone several hundred miles of levees, the entire W. bank being protected by these constructions.

Geology.—Nearly the whole of the state belongs to the Tertiary and Post-Tertiary formations, with the strata dipping generally in the direction of the Gulf and overlying the normal Cretaceous deposits of the Gulf slope. The area of the Mississippi delta itself covers hardly less than one-third that of the entire state and the deposits which compose it are many hundred feet deep. The mineral resources of the state are unimportant, but there are extensive deposits of rock-salt, iron and iron-ore, petroleum, gypsum, sulphur, and lignite, besides fertilising marls.

Climate, Flora, and Fauna.—A large part of the state enjoys a semi-tropical climate, the average January temperature in the delta region being about 60°. Frosts are not infrequent in the N., and they are at times destructive to agricultural products. The average annual rainfall is 50–60 inches. Pines and oaks (including the live-oak) of several kinds, cypress, black- and sweet-gum, several magnolias, hickory, chioot, bois d'arc, cotton-wood, honey-, yellow- and black-locust, several elms, ash, plane, and numbers of other useful timber trees abound in many sections of the state. The abundant native cane is utilised as a material for paper-making, and the Tillandsia or "Spanish moss" which drapes the forest trees affords a substitute for the horsehair employed by upholsterers. The lynx, raccoon, opossum, deer, and other game animals, and at rarer intervals the black bear and the panther, or American lion, are still met with in certain parts. Many species of birds make this state their winter home. Venomous and other serpents and large alligators are found in the swamps, especially southward.

Agricultural Resources.—The inexhaustible fertility of the soil of a very large portion of this state must always render it attractive to the agriculturist. This is the only state where the culture of the true sugar-cane has proved remunerative upon a large scale. The production of cane-sugar in the year 1899–1900 amounted to 132,000 long tons. The quantity of molasses produced in 1898–99 was 24,952,188 gallons, or nearly five times that produced by all the other southern states collectively. There were 1,376,254 acres in 1900 given over to the cultivation of cotton, the average yield of which was 234 pounds of lint cotton per acre; 276,966 acres to the cultivation of the cane; 201,685 acres to rice; and 1,343,756 acres to corn. In 1899–1900 the cotton crop was 699,476 bales. The other main agricultural crops were for the year 1900: Corn, 24,702,598 bushels; oats, 614,142 bushels; potatoes, 539,630 bushels; and hay, 50,302 tons. Market-gardening and floriculture are profitable occupations near New Orleans.

The chief manufacturing industries of the state are the manufacture of sugar and molasses. Lumber and forest products (including naval stores, such as oil of turpentine, resin, and tar) are obtained in the pine woods. The shipments of yellow pine in the year 1900 amounted to about 350,000,000 feet. Cotton-seed oil, oil-cake, and the oils of the pindar, goubier or ground-nut, and castor-bean are valuable materials. The tobacco industry of the state has acquired considerable importance. In 1899 there were registered 200 cigar and tobacco factories, whose combined output was 46,137,986 cigars, 45,472,160 cigarettes, and 1,932,154 pounds of tobacco.

Commerce and Railroads.—New Orleans is the principal seaport on the southern coast of the United States and is connected by steamship lines with the ports of the Old World. The number of ship entries at this port in 1900 was 1220; the clearances, 1187, the combined tonnage being 3,395,442. Railroads have not been constructed in Louisiana on a scale of such magnitude as in most of the other states, because her rivers have all along furnished ready and cheap communication. In 1846 there were 40 miles of railroad; in 1850, 80 miles; in 1855, 203 miles; in 1860, 335 miles; in 1870, 479 miles; in 1890, 1750 miles; and in 1900, 2833 miles.

Parishes.—Louisiana is divided into 59 parishes, corresponding to the counties of the other states, viz., Acadia, Ascension, Assumption, Avoyelles, Bienville, Boesier, Caddo, Calcasieu, Caldwell, Cameron, Catahoula, Claiborne, Concordia, De Soto, East Baton Rouge, East Carroll, East Feliciana, Franklin, Grant, Iberia, Iberville, Jackson, Jefferson, Lafayette, Lafourche, Lincoln, Livingston, Madison, Morehouse, Natchitoches, Orleans, Ouachita, Plaquemines, Pointe Coupée, Rapides, Red River, Richland, Sabine, St. Bernard, St. Charles, St. Helena, St. James, St. John Baptist, St. Landry, St. Martin, St. Mary, St. Tammany, Tangipahoe, Tensas, Terrebonne, Union, Vermilion, Vernon, Washington, Webster, West Baton Rouge, West Carroll, West Feliciana, Winn.

Cities and Towns.—The principal are New Orleans, the metropolis of the Gulf States (pop. in 1900, 287,104); Shreveport, the commercial centre of northwestern Louisiana (pop. 16,013); Baton Rouge, the state capital (pop. 11,269). Other places of note are New Iberia (pop. 6815), Lake Charles (pop. 6680), Alexandria (pop. 5648), Monroe (pop. 5428), Crowley, Donaldsonville, Plaquemines, Houma, and Morgan City.

Education.—Normal-school instruction is provided at the state normal school at Natchitoches, at the New Orleans normal school, and in some of the colleges and private schools. New Orleans is the seat of Tulane University, which takes first rank in the educational institutions of the state, of New Orleans University, Southern University, and Straight University. The state university and agricultural and mechanical college is at Baton Rouge. Industrial colleges are located at Ruston and Lafayette. There are in the state several colleges of the liberal arts, with a number of professional schools and colleges for women.

Government.—The present constitution of the state was adopted in May, 1898. The governor, together with the principal officers, and the members of both houses of the legislature, are elected for a term of four years. Louisiana is represented by 7 members in the Federal Congress.

History.—The region constituting Louisiana was traversed by the followers of De Soto in 1542. In 1682 the French explorer La Salle descended the Mississippi and took possession of its valley, naming the region Louisiana, in honor of Louis XIV. In 1699 a French colony was founded by Iberville at Biloxi, on the coast of what is now Mississippi. Other settlements were made soon after, among them one at Mobile, in what is now Alabama. In 1717 the Scottish financier and adventurer John Law secured from the French government for his Compagnie d'Occident the right to exploit the region about the Mississippi, and in the following year New Orleans was founded. Law's schemes for the development of Louisiana bore little fruit. In 1763 the region became a crown colony. Louisiana was transferred to Spain in 1763, was retroceded to France in 1800, and in 1803 the whole province was purchased by President Jefferson for the United States. This purchase included nearly all the present territory of the United States between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains, exclusive of Texas and the eastern part of New Mexico. It did not include that part of the present state of Louisiana which has the Pearl River on the E., the Mississippi River on the W., and the rivers Iberville and Amite and lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain on the S.; for this tract was a portion of the Spanish province of West Florida, and, although it was ceded by act of Congress in 1812 to Louisiana, it was not definitively United States territory until after the Florida purchase of 1819. In 1804 the Territory of Orleans was constituted, with nearly the present limits of the state, and in 1812 the state of Louisiana was admitted to the Union. The state seceded from the Union in 1861. The work of reconstruction was completed in 1868.

Population.—There still remain thousands of descendants of the French colonists, and the French language is habitually spoken by many of the people. Pop. in 1810, 76,556; in 1820, 153,407; in 1830, 215,739; in 1840, 352,411; in 1850, 517,762; in 1860, 708,002, including 324,726 slaves and 13,527 free colored people; in 1870, 726,915; in 1880, 939,946; in 1890, 1,118,587; in 1900, 1,381,625. The negroes in 1900 numbered 650,804.

Louisiana, a banking city of Pike co., Mo., on the Mississippi River, about 27 miles below Hannibal, and on the Chicago and Alton and other railroads. It has steam flouring-mills, tobacco-factories, machine-shops, planing- and lumber-mills, foundries, etc. Large quantities of tobacco, wheat, pork, etc., are shipped here. Pop. in 1900, 5131.

Louis Napoleon, Cape, in Grinnell Land, Arctic America. Lat. about 79° 38' N.

Louis Philippe, Cape, in the S. part of Wollaston Land, in Coronation Gulf. Lat. 68° 35' N.; lon. 109° 45' W.

Louis Philippe Land, the N. portion of a tract of land (ordinarily designated Graham Land or Graham Island) in the Antarctic Ocean, off South Shetland (SE. of Tierra del Fuego), about lat. 63° 30' S., lon. 57° W. It is crowned with mountain-peaks covered with perpetual snow.

Louisville, a banking post-town of Barbour co., Ala., 9 miles SW. of Clayton. It has cotton interests. Pop. in 1900, 416.

Louisville, a banking post-town of Boulder co., Colo., on the Colorado and Southern R., 8 miles SE. of Boulder. Pop. in 1900, 966.

Louisville, a banking post-town, capital of Jefferson co., Ga., on Rocky Comfort Creek, near the Ogeechee River, about 46 miles SSW. of Augusta. It was the capital of the state from 1795 to 1804. Pop. in 1900, 1009. It is on the Louisville and Wadley R.

Louisville, a banking post-village, capital of Clay co., Ill., on the Little Wabash River and on the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern R., 100 miles SSE. of Springfield. Pop. in 1900, 646.

Louisville, a city of Pottawatomie co., Kan., on Rock Creek, 40 miles WNW. of Topeka. Pop. in 1900, 336.

Louisville, loo'-e-vil or loo'-is-vil, the principal city of Kentucky, capital of Jefferson co., beautifully situated at the falls (rapids) of the Ohio River, 400 miles from its mouth and 130 miles below Cincinnati, on the Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville, the Illinois Central and other railroads. Lat. 38° 12' N.; lon. 85° 42' W. The town is built on a plateau about 60 feet above the river at an ordinary stage of water and about 25 feet above the highest flood-mark. It has 7 miles of river-front and the even surface extending southward from the river affords ample space for the growth of the city in that direction. Three fine bridges, varying from  $\frac{1}{2}$  to 1 mile in length, connect the city with New Albany and Jeffersonville, on the right bank of the river, in the state of Indiana. A canal has been constructed at the rapids. Louisville is a city of attractive homes and beautifully shaded streets. It has a number of imposing buildings, among which the most conspicuous are the custom-house, court-house, and city-hall. Among the educational institutions are the University of Louisville and the Polytechnic Society of Kentucky, the latter possessing a museum, a gallery of paintings, and a library of over 50,000 volumes. There are, besides, medical, law, and other schools. Iroquois, Cherokee, and Shawnee Parks, laid out since 1890, add to the attractiveness of the city. On its eastern margin is Cave Hill Cemetery. The state blind asylum, containing a printing-house for the blind, is located here. Louisville is commercially one of the chief gate-ways to the SW., and its commerce has developed very rapidly as the result of its facilities for transportation. Besides the Ohio River, which is usually open for navigation during the entire year, there are 11 lines of railroad having their termini or connections at this point. The city is the largest leaf-tobacco market in the world, the Farmers' Tobacco Warehouse, with a capacity of about 7000 hogsheads, selling 30,000,000 pounds of leaf-tobacco annually. One-third of all the tobacco raised in America, or about 200,000 hogsheads, is handled here. The city has also an extensive trade in pork, wheat, and corn.

Though Louisville may be said to be a commercial city, its manufactures are extensive. Among the principal establishments are its iron-foundries, tanneries, agricultural-implement works, wagon- and furniture-factories, leather- and cement-works, and factories for the manufacture of gas-pipe and water-pipes. Louisville is one of the greatest whiskey marts in the world, the Kentucky whiskeys, largely distilled here, having a wide reputation. Pork-packing is extensively carried on. The place was settled in 1779 and was named in honor of Louis XVI. of France. It was incorporated as a city in 1828. Pop. in 1860, 63,033; in 1870, 100,753; in 1880, 123,758; in 1890, 161,129; in 1900, 204,731.

Louisville, a village of Carroll co., Md. Pop. 50.

Louisville, a post-town, capital of Winston co., Miss., 95 miles NE. of Jackson. Pop. in 1900, 505.

Louisville, a post-village of Lincoln co., Mo., about 22 miles S. by W. of Louisiana. Pop. 100.

Louisville, a banking post-village of Cass co., Neb., on the S. bank of the Platte River, 18 miles W. of Plattsmouth, on the Burlington Route and other railroads. Pop. in 1900, 738.

Louisville, or Millerville, a post-village in Louisville township (town), St. Lawrence co., N.Y., on the Grass River, 10 miles N. of Norwood. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1621; of the village, 150.

Louisville, a banking post-village of Stark co., Ohio, on the Pennsylvania R., 7 miles NE. of Canton. It has manufactures of hoisting-apparatus, brick and tile, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1374.

Louisville, a post-village of Blount co., Tenn., on the Holston River, 25 miles below Knoxville. Pop. about 310.

Louisville Landing, a post-hamlet of St. Lawrence co., N.Y., on the St. Lawrence River, about 30 miles below Ogdensburg.

Loulé, lo-lá', a town of Portugal, in Algarve, 6 miles N. of Faro. It has retained in part its Moorish walls. The principal industry is that of basket-making. Pop. in 1900, 22,511.

Loup, loop, a county in the central part of Nebraska. Area, 574 sq. m. It is intersected by the North Loup and Calamus rivers. Capital, Taylor. Pop. in 1900, 1305.

Loup, a banking city, capital of Sherman co., Neb., on the Middle Loup River, 42 miles N. of Kearney, on the Union Pacific R. and the Burlington Route. It has stock-raising industries. Pop. in 1900, 826.

Lucknow presents a striking appearance from a distance, with its minarets and gilded cupolas, but is disappointing on near inspection, being composed in great part of mean and narrow streets. In the better quarter the buildings are handsome and the streets broad. In the principal street is a lofty portal, ornamented with many small towers, and at the farther extremity is the famous Imambara, a marble mosque containing the mausoleum of Asaf-ud-Daula (1775-97), to whom much of the "palatial" splendor of Lucknow is due. There are many stately khans, handsome mosques ("pearl mosque," with a noted collection of Oriental manuscripts, "great mosque," etc.), and pagodas in various parts of the city, not a few of them in the most wretched quarters. The principal edifices are in the main of modern construction. There are several large ("royal") gardens and parks. The scenery around the city is very pleasing, especially along the banks of the Gumti, which exhibits a scene of great activity. Near the city is the Delkusha Park, which at one time contained an extensive menagerie. Lucknow is the seat of Canning College, affiliated with the University of Allahabad, Reid Christian College, and of the provincial museum of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh. There are municipal water-works. The city is an important railway centre and a busy commercial place. The manufactures include gold and silver brocade, muslins, shawls, etc. Large railway-shops are located here. Pop. in 1901, 264,049. The inhabitants are about three-fifths Mohammedans and two-fifths Hindus. There are about 3000 Christians. The British made a heroic defence here against the Sepoy mutineers in 1857. Havelock brought relief to the beleaguered garrison, after which the siege continued until success was finally brought by Sir Colin Campbell. Early in 1858 the British succeeded in recapturing the city.

The little state of Luxembourg, a county down to 1364 and after that a duchy, a member of the Holy Roman (German) Empire, played a conspicuous rôle in the latter part of the Middle Ages. The house of Luxembourg occupied the imperial throne of Germany from 1308-13, from 1347-1400, and from 1411-37, and the royal throne of Bohemia from 1310-1437. In 1443 the duchy came by marriage to Burgundy and in 1516 it passed with the rest of the Netherlands to Spain. By the peace of the Pyrenees, in 1659, part of it was ceded to the French and took the name of French Luxembourg. In 1713 Spain ceded Luxembourg to Austria, from whom it was wrested by the French in 1795. In 1815 it was erected into a grand-duchy and given to the king of the Netherlands. In 1839 it was divided in two, one part becoming a Belgian province and the remainder continuing under the rule of the king of the Netherlands as grand-duke. The grand-duchy was neutralized in 1867 by the action of the Great Powers. In 1890 the connection of Luxembourg with the Netherlands was severed. The grand-duchy is included in the German Zollverein.

Luxembourg (formerly Lützelburg), capital of the grand-duchy of Luxembourg, 117 miles SE. of Brussels. Luzon (Sp. pron. loo-thôn'), an island belonging to the United States in the Malay Archipelago, according to official Spanish data the largest of the Philippine Islands, between the China Sea on the W. and the North Pacific Ocean on the E., and between lat. 12° 30' and 18° 38' N. (Cape Bojeador), and lon. 119° 43' and 124° 10' E. It is the northernmost of the large islands of the group, and is separated by narrow channels from Mindoro and Samar. Area, about 44,400 sq. m., including various outlying islands. It is very irregular in shape, an elongated and deeply indented peninsula stretching out in the SE. and connected with the main body of the island by an isthmus only about 5 miles across in its narrowest part. The surface is very diversified, the Caraballos mountains being the principal chain. It is divided into several branches, the chief of which are Caraballo (or Cordillera Occidental, Caraballo Central (or del Norte), in the NW. portion; Caraballo de Balor (Cordillera Oriental or Sierra Madre), along the E. coast, from the centre to the NE. point; and a branch running towards the S., into the SE. portion. They are largely of a volcanic character and there are many active and inactive craters in Luzon: Mayón (with a violent eruption in June, 1899; elevation, about 8300 feet) and Bulasán, in the SE.; Cagua (3940 ft.), in the NE.; Taal, in Lake Bombón, in the S. of the main portion of the island, and others. Many disastrous eruptions have taken place. The mountain of Datú, in the Caraballo Central, is, after Mayón, seemingly the loftiest summit of the island. Granite and other crystalline rocks enter largely into the construction of the northern mountains. The hydrographic system includes six chief rivers, with numerous other streams and several lakes. The Rio Grande de Cagayán is the longest river; it has a northerly course of about 200 miles, emptying into the China Sea. The other rivers are the Agno Grande, Abra, Rio Grande de la Pampanga, Vicol (or Biicol), and Pasig, which last overflows by several mouths from Laguna de Bay into Manila Bay, passing through Manila. The lakes include Laguna de Bay, Bombón, Cagayán, etc. The vegetation of Luzon is exceedingly luxuriant. Dense forests crown the loftiest heights and rich verdure and abundant cultivated crops cover the plains and valleys. Among the crops are rice, the chief article of food, sugar-cane, which is extensively grown, abaca, or manila hemp, various species of palm, cotton, coffee, cinnamon, maize, and tobacco. The minerals include gold, iron, copper, coal, sulphur, marble, gypsum, agates, jaspers, and carnelians, some of which (including gold) are mined. Cotton and silk tissues, cordage, tobacco, plain and varnished leather, embroidery, wood and ivory carvings, mats, carriages, etc., are manufactured, and boats, canoes, and large vessels are built. Capital, Manila. Pop. in 1899, 3,708,350, composed in its native elements of Tagals, Vicolis, Igorotes, Pampangos, Negritos, etc., mainly derivatives from Malay stocks. The only railroad (120 miles) in the islands is in Luzon, between Manila and Dagupán. The Batanes and Babuyan islands groups are dependencies of Luzon. See PHILIPPINES.

LYONNAIS, lee'õn'nâ', an old province of France, now included in the departments of Rhône and Loire. Capital, Lyons.

LYONS, lî'õns (Fr. Lyons, lee'õn'; anc. Lugdunum), the third city in population and second in industrial importance of France, a fortress of the first class, capital of the department of Rhône and seat of an archbishop, 250 miles (direct) SSE. of Paris and 160 miles N. of the Mediterranean; lat. of observatory, 45° 41' 40" N., lon. 4° 47' 9" E. It is situated at the confluence of the Saône, flowing from the N., and the Rhône, coming from the E., and the main part of the city is built on the tongue of land formed by the two rivers, although it extends to the opposite banks of both streams, the communication being maintained by many bridges. On the right bank of the Saône the hills rise in the form of an amphitheatre and are partially occupied by streets. From the hill of Fourvière a grand panorama is presented to the eye, embracing distinct views of the Alps on the E. and the Cévennes on the S. The city is of striking appearance, and its modernization has given it many fine quarters, among which may be mentioned the magnificent quays, flanking the rivers for several miles; the open squares and promenades (Place Carnot, Place Bellecour, the fashionable city centre, Place des Terreaux), many of them adorned with monumental sculptures; the stately Rue de la République and Rue de l'Hôtel de Ville; and the Parc de la Tête-d'Or, embracing 280 acres and containing zoological and botanical gardens and an observatory.

Several of the public edifices of Lyons are remarkable for their antiquity as well as for the beauty of their architecture. The cathedral of St. Jean, on the slope of the Fourvière, is in the Gothic style of the time of Louis XI. and is one of the most interesting churches of France. Higher up the acclivity stands the church of Notre Dame de Fourvière, in modernized Byzantine style, which was consecrated in 1896. Among the other ecclesiastical structures are the church of St. Nizier (the ancient cathedral) and the church of Ainay, the oldest in Lyons, portions of whose original structure of the sixth century—columns from a Roman temple that entered into its construction—still survive. The archiepiscopal palace, situated near the cathedral, is a large edifice. In the Place des Terreaux stands the Hôtel de Ville, one of the finest edifices of the kind in France, though very irregular in its style.

The municipal library is the best provincial collection in France. It contains 200,000 volumes and has besides a rich collection of MSS. The Palais St. Pierre (or des Arts), facing the Place des Terreaux, occupies the ancient convent of St. Pierre, which is a fine, majestic edifice. It contains galleries of paintings and sculptures, a cabinet of medals and antiquities, natural history collections, and a library. The chief educational institutions are the university (having in 1904, 2600 students), the academy, the lycée (or college), medical school and school of pharmacy, school of fine arts, schools of industrial art (École de la Martinière) and forestry, etc. The Bourse is one of the most striking buildings of the city. It contains a museum of the textile industry. The Palais de Justice and the building of the prefecture, erected in 1880-90, are notable edifices. The most important charitable establishments are the Hôtel-Dieu (hospital), the Maison de la Charité (a very extensive alms- or poor-house), the Mont de Piété, and the Hospice de l'Antiquaille.

As a manufacturing town Lyons early acquired a high rank. Its silk manufactures are the most important in the world. This constitutes its great staple and employs 85,000 looms in the city and its near neighborhood, besides 25,000 others in the adjoining departments. The silk-industry, with its allied industries, gives employment in and near Lyons to over 200,000 hands. The annual exports of pure silks amount to $50,000,000, and of manufactured articles (articles of apparel, umbrella-covers, etc.) to $30,000,000. Lyons has also manufactories of hats, books, jewelry, paper, machinery, perfumes, Jacquard looms, foulards, hardware, bronzes, soap, candles, shawls, lace, and liqueurs, besides dye-works, foundries, glass-works, potteries, tanneries, breweries, and chemical-works. The city is admirably situated for trade and is a great entrepôt both for the N. and the S. As a financial centre it occupies the leading place in France after Paris.

History.—When Caesar invaded Gaul, Lyons (Lugdunum) was already a place of importance. It became the principal Roman colony in Gaul and gave its name to one of the divisions of the country, Gallia Lugdunensis. Several emperors made it their occasional residence, vying with one another in adorning it. It was the birthplace of Claudius, Marcus Aurelius, and Caracalla. Various Roman remains exist. Lyons early received Christianity and at the end of the second century, when it was already the seat of a bishop, contained thousands of Christians. Many of its noblest Roman structures disappeared in the invasions of the barbarians. In the Middle Ages the counts of Lyonnais and of Forez held sway for a time in the city, and subsequently it was ruled by a succession of archbishops. From the fourteenth century it was under the direct sway of the French kings. Louis XIV. did much for Lyons by the construction of quays and the erection of beautiful edifices. In 1793 the troops of the Convention perpetrated wholesale butcheries in the city, which had taken up arms against the Reign of Terror. Pop. in 1852, 156,169; in 1901, 459,099.
